College Capers

by Betty-Sue McCready

Oregon State College—Elections are in the air now. With news of the selection of the student publication heads, the announcement that all bids of honor societies must be made before next Wednesday, and first stories of the student body and class nominations for officers running in the Barometer, Oregon States find little time for study. Junior Week-end plans and Women's Week-end arrangements are also in the air with many new features promised by the various heads.

Don Drake of Heppner and Dick Highland of Bandon were selected as editors in chief of the Barometer and Beaver respectively, while Ed Smith of Corvallis and John Fenner of Portland will head the business side of the two publications for the coming year. Student directory heads have not been selected.

Sororities and fraternities have also been busy pledging and initiating members. Jean Glibertson was initiated into Pi Beta Phi sorority recently. Russell Beardsley pledged Theta Chi last week and Anna Mae Grabenhorst, Pi Beta Phi.

Last night students gathered at the men's gymnasium to attend the first lyceum of the term. Ted Shawn with his men dancers presented "O Libertad," an American saga in three acts.

Dainty chiffon and dnet formals in pale blues, greens, pinks and other pastel tints are popular on the campus this term as well as white coats with tux trousers for the boys.

"Names in the News" were really news this week when Theta Sigma Phi, honor society for women in journalism, honored two outstanding members of each living group with a Matrix banquet at the Benton hotel. The speaker of the evening was Sam Raddon, Sunday editor of the Journal, who told of opportunities for women in journalism. Doug Chambers and Don Coons were two Salem boys seen at the banquet.

The Beaver, Oregon State yearbook, which will be issued next month, is featuring a new section this year on personalities. Eight outstanding boys and girls who have been selected as prominent in cam-
