

Quelle Is Offered as One of Coast's Finest

Tomorrow evening, beginning at 6 o'clock and continuing until closing time, The Quelle restaurant will be formally presented to the citizens of Salem and vicinity as one of the finest places of its kind on the Pacific coast. The restaurant, which is owned by Frank H. Chataas and Dr. R. J. Nicol, was opened four and a half years ago and only recently was closed for reconstruction throughout.

The grand opening tomorrow evening will feature a special eight-course dinner to be served throughout the evening, beginning at 6:30. A special program of music will be presented by a string orchestra. Visitors to the Quelle during the evening hours will be invited to inspect the entire plant. Employees will be on hand in all parts of the building to answer questions about new equipment and special features of the restaurant.

Music for the evening will be supplied by a string group featuring prominent local musicians. Brad Collins, pianist, will direct, assisted by Mary Headrick, violin; Charles Ned Vornik, violin; and Glen Burright, bass.

Best Equipment Featured
The new Quelle features the very latest in restaurant equipment from an all-electric kitchen to prepare food to the most modern methods of serving it to the public. Decorated in the modern mode of styling, the new restaurant offers the utmost in customer comfort and convenience.

In addition to an elite fountain service and booths that will accommodate 84 persons at a single serving, the restaurant will also feature a special dining room service catering to parties and banquets. The new dining rooms are equipped to handle small parties of 10 or 15 to banquets of 200 persons.

Mr. Chataas is a restaurateur of many years' experience, first starting out in this business in Beloit, Wis., where he owned and operated two restaurants. From Beloit he migrated to the West and opened two places in Walla Walla, only to move a few years later to La Grande, in eastern Oregon, to open still another cafe. This move was followed in a short time to Pendleton where he ultimately owned two more restaurants.

Same Name Used
It was from Pendleton that he moved to Salem in 1935 to establish his business in its present location. In all his moves Mr. Chataas has been consistent in one respect—each of his restaurants has been called The Quelle. In Salem he divided his business with Dr. R. J. Nicol, former owner of the Hollywood theater, who has been his business partner since coming to Salem.

According to Mr. Chataas, the remodeling of the local restaurant was not a sudden move. Increasing business, together with the increasing demand in the city for a place where banquets for a large number of persons could be held, finally brought about the transition.

"In making this move, it was my sole aim to give Salem the finest restaurant it was possible to provide," Mr. Chataas said.

Staff Grows Rapidly
That The Quelle has progressed in its four years in Salem is borne out in its growth. When it was first opened the staff consisted of five employees, including the proprietor. Today, the staff boasts 23, exclusive of Mr. Chataas.

The remodeling of the building was done through local agencies. Leo Johnson installed all electrical equipment and lighting fixtures; Woody Furniture, linoleum; Skewis and Judson, plumbing; Carl Armstrong, sheetmetal work; Harold Dunsmoor, interior decorating; Caspar and Cutler, ventilation and heating systems. The heavy duty kitchen equipment and fountain material was obtained through firms in Portland. The Hazel Dell Dairy was awarded the contract to supply the restaurant with all dairy products daily.

Second hand clothing from Africa is to be sold in East Africa.

Children Capable of Selecting Own Diet

Montreal, June 21 (U.P.)—Dr. Clara M. Davis, of Winnetka, Ill., told the Canadian medical association today that young children are perfectly capable of choosing their own diets and thriving on them.

Dr. Davis said the average daily caloric intake of the children during each six months' period were in every instance found to be within the limits set by scientific nutritional standards for the individual's age.

"All the children proved able to manage their own menus; all had hearty appetites, and all thrive," Dr. Davis said. "Constipation was unknown among them, and laxatives never were needed. During the six years no serious illness occurred among the children."

For the experiments, large trays of foods were placed before the children and they were permitted to eat what they liked.

Dr. Davis said the children chose their food at random, and there was not the slightest evidence of choice directed by "instinct." They tried nearly all articles on the list, and within a few days they began developing definite tastes and reached eagerly for some foods and neglected others.

Some of the children were in poor condition, four being undernourished and underweight and five having rickets, when taken for the experiments, but within a "reasonable time" the nutrition of all came up to optimal standards, Dr. Davis said.

All cases of rickets healed in approximately the same length of time, although one of the children suffering from them was allowed to eat what they liked.

Artillery Roars From Guard Camps
Camp Clatsop, June 21 (AP)—Twelve-inch mortars and 10-inch rifles echoed up and down the coast line near Fort Stevens yesterday as units of the 249th field artillery peppered a target towed in the Columbia river by a tug.

The squatty mortars expelled 900-pound projectiles while the big rifles threw 550-pound bullets.

The six-inch guns spoke at Fort Canby on the Columbia's north shore, across from Fort Stevens, as other coast artillery units drilled.

Battery A, Albany coast artillery unit, drew warm praise for firing eight record shots with the mortars onto the target 9000 yards away.

Battery D from Klamath Falls displayed exceptional accuracy with the 10-inch rifles although it was slightly over the time allowance. The target was approximately eight miles away.

Marshall Hopes To Scale Doonerak

Fairbanks, Alaska, June 21 (AP)—On an expedition to challenge on foot the loftiest peak in Arctic America, Bob Marshall, chief of the division of recreation and land use in the U. S. forest service, arrived here by airplane today from Washington, D. C., en route to pick up two hardy souldough "mushers."

Marshall, with Jess Allen and Kenneth Harvey, the souldoughs will make a 75-mile pack train trip and then attempt to scale 10,000-foot Mt. Doonerak, which never has been conquered by man. The peak, in the Endicott range, is so steep that scarcely any snow clings to its precipitous slopes.

Marshall is a familiar figure to the Alaskan scene, having written "Arctic Village," a story dealing with Eskimo life.

Historic Mural Takes Place in State House

A huge mural depicting the arrival of the news at Salem that Oregon had been admitted to the union was mounted in the senate of the new state capitol today. Frank H. Schwarz, New York artist who did the latest painting and two of the four murals in the rotunda of the capitol, came here from the east to supervise the mounting.

The mural, which is mounted on a curved background above the president's platform, is dominantly grey with overtones of blue, green and lavender, to harmonize with the dark wood panelling of the room.

The scene shows Steffin Senter, young Oregon City horseman, who had splashed overland from Oregon City with the news of admission, arriving in Salem after a 30-hour ride on March 16, 1859.

The pioneers shown on the panel seem only lethargic in their interest in the news. Schwarz said his own researches, indicated the people of Salem, incensed when an earlier application had been turned down, were not avid in their interest.

The painting was laid before the old Bennett House, leading hostelry of the day. Many pioneers are standing around in groups and Senter, the courier, is reading from a written dispatch. Women, dressed in the costume of the era, show little more interest than the men.

Schwarz said he had made no effort at portraiture in his work, but that several of the men represented were painted with the idea of individual pioneers in mind. Included in these are General Joseph Lane and Jesse Applegate, men who were believed to be in Salem the day the news arrived.

Sally Rand Becomes Business Executive

San Francisco, June 20 (U.P.)—Meet Sally Rand, the business executive, who spends her days worrying about meeting the payroll and complying with social security laws and her nights figuring out ways of increasing her business.

Occasionally Miss Rand takes a day off to address a woman's club or a businessmen's convention, and, of course, she still has to inject a personal touch into "Sally Rand's Nude Ranch" at the Golden Gate International Exposition.

But, for the most part, Miss Rand works from 12 to 18 hours a day at being a business executive. She lent the girl that Hickory County, Mo., knew, nor the fan dancer that the Chicago fair visitors went crazy about.

She personally hires the 125 employees she has at her "Nude Ranch" and "Miss America," both of which are incorporated. The "Miss America show, incidentally, is a night club extravaganza that would do justice to a Billy Rose or a Flo Ziegfeld.

In 1932 Miss Rand was broke and slightly hungry. She got her set of fans and the rest is history—that is, until her current role of discussing social and economic problems and of being one of the most important persons connected with the San Francisco Exposition.

Perhaps the most important consideration now that Miss Rand has become a business executive is whether she makes money.

"Yes," she said, "plenty, I paid off my original investment within the first three weeks of the fair, since then, even with $3,000 weekly overhead, there has been plenty of profit."

As for Miss Rand's diversion—"I haven't any. I get an average of six hours sleep and I spend all my waking hours at work, either directing my shows at the fair or at the night club. Whenever I can I accept invitations to make speeches."

But there must be someone romantic in her life; perhaps she may even be thinking about getting married.

"Never," she said. "I was engaged once. I'm going to go on being a bachelor girl."
