Pioneer Simpson Clan History Is Colorful

Zena—The William and Mary Simpson clan held its annual reunion at Dallas park with a representative group attending. The reunion was organized July, 1928. John Simpson, president, elected last year.

Dallas park next year on the third Sunday in July. The Simpsons were originally Scottish barons from England and the forefather, William, was a son of the youngest brother who came to the United States and was killed in the Revolutionary war. The estate in Scotland eventually reverted to the Bank of England. Our people are from Virginia, Tennessee and Kentucky. In 1820 William Simpson moved with his family to Platte county, Mo., and in 1846 joined a wagon train at St. Joe, Mo., to immigrate to Oregon.

It would seem almost like an old Biblical pilgrimage when they started with their father, William, who was a Baptist preacher, as patriarch of the train and with all their household goods, oxen, mules and horses. Benjamin, eldest son of William, was chosen as captain of the train. He had three children, John, Sylvester and Sam L. Simpson. David was chosen as scout to go ahead and reconnoiter for Indians. One time he became very ill and his wife tied her feather bed on a mule and he rode on this makeshift ambulance. At one time they were three days behind the train, but they traveled late in the cool nights and caught up again. One daughter, Casie, died on the way and was buried on the banks of the Platte river.

When they arrived here they went first to Oregon City but eventually all who were old enough took up donation land claims in the Waldo and Silverton hills and ran each other as possible. Oregon City was their trading point and John McLoughlin, who owned a store there, became their good friend. They would drive ox teams to Oregon City for groceries and feed, taking several days to go and come. Benjamin took his wife and three children and moved to Clackamas City where he built a sawmill on the Clackamas river. One of the first saw mills in this country. He built a store later and sold groceries and lumber.

He moved to Salem in 1852 and built a steamboat called the "Oregon" on which he shipped his lumber. In 1854 he sold out in Salem and bought a farm near Sublimity and also a saw mill on the Santiam called the Neal saw mill. In 1856 he sold that mill and the government hired Ben to build a saw mill on the Grand Ronde reservation and he bought the old Settlers store at Port Yamhill and from there he took a shipload of lumber to Newport and built the old "Newport" to haul it over. He took this cargo to San Francisco during the big California gold rush and received a fabulous price for it.

Simpson was elected to the second territorial legislature, later was elected to represent Marion county in the house and was representative of Polk county at the breaking out of the Civil war. In 1872 he was representative from Marion county. His brother, David, married Julia Anne Haven and came across the plains in 1846 for their honeymoon. He located for several years in Yamhill county, got dissatisfied and moved to Waldo Hills where he took a land claim and reared his family. In 1858 he sold his farm and moved to Salem where he spent the rest of his life. He was appointed as justice of peace which office he held for many years. He owned much land in and near Salem and at one time many business houses in Salem, in fact acres of land that the city of Salem is built on.

Another brother, Barnett, was a boy of 10 when he came across the plains. He married a sister of Julia Anne Haven. They lost nine children in two weeks at their home in the Waldo Hills, during an epidemic. He moved to South Salem and was elected supervisor of public instruction which office he held for many years. James Simpson took a land claim in the Waldo Hills and lived his life there and reared his family.
