Brush Fires Are Controlled At Jefferson

Jefferson—Saturday night and Sunday Jefferson was covered with a haze of smoke caused from two nearby brush fires which were brought under control after hours of hard fighting on the part of town and country people.

The fire across the river, which menaced Camp Santiam, started about 10 o'clock when an old cabin near the Santiam river occupied by a truck gardener on the Miller estate, now owned by Phillip and Stone, burned, supposedly starting from a cigarette stub in bedding.

The flames spread rapidly in the underbrush through vine maple, ash and willows, and fanned by a high wind, was soon burning around the Camp Santiam cabins. It required the work of a large crew of fire fighters to save the place. At one point the fire burned to the highway badly damaging several telephone poles.

The other fire started Saturday afternoon in the Parrish Gap district and, aided by the wind, swept through the stubble fields on the Weddle place, through the woods on the Klampe hill, to fields in the Green's bridge district. A sprinkler system set up in the Boyer stubble field checked the fire at that point and late Saturday night the wind died down and the fire was reported to be under control. Sunday morning about 8 o'clock the fire broke out of bounds on the Klampe hill and help from town was called for. Later reports were that the fire was checked.

At 2 o'clock Sunday afternoon the fire got out of control again and was burning in the timber on the Roland place now owned by Ivan Jones.
