BLOOD RUNS COLD By Ann Demarest

Chapter 38
"You're the perfect Watson," he said with a smile. "I hit on it when Mr. Kimball showed me some of his books. He had a passion for collecting the most valuable things, and he didn't want to sell them. You see, Chris," he said, taking my hand, "I tried to buy one of his books and he just smiled. He wouldn't have parted with it for the world. Just as Mrs. MacDonald said, he was mad about collecting. He wouldn't stop at anything to get what he wanted and," he added soberly, "he didn't stop. Joan and Richard were in the way, so he got rid of them."

"Where did the necklace come from?" I said, extricating my hand.

"He bought it a long while ago and then took it to a jeweler's way downtown to have it strung on a heavier chain. I found the store last night."

"Is that where you were?" I thought you were probably sitting up with Mary Ann."

"I slept in a chair down in the shop to keep an eye on things."

I frowned in recollection. "So it was Mr. Kimball who wrote on my list of questions."

Dirck shook his head. "No, it was Ishl. Kimball must have seen the list and told Ishl to have something to do with Joan's death. Ishl didn't know, you see, who had done it. And he was so devoted to Mr. Kimball that he did exactly as he said. You see, Kimball gave Ishl the keys that Sarah lost. He was the one who found them and he kept them because it would look as though anyone could get in the house with them lost. And it was Ishl who pushed your key onto the floor the other night. He was trying to get in and I don't know for what reason. But when Richard and I came in he must have heard us and hurried back to the shop. We were pretty certain that we saw him disappear into the back of the house."

"But how did you finally get the proof?"

"In the box of books that Ishl carried down from Joan's apartment. On Kimball's return trip to Joan's apartment that night he hid the gloves under the cover of an encyclopedia. No one thought of going through all of those books. Particularly after they were packed in the boxes. When they were packed he had used them when he slid down the drainpipe. They were streaked with rust and still damp from the snow. I found them this morning when you were in the shop while Kimball was out walking. The box was in his bedroom. I came in by the cellar after I saw him leave, from the store across the street. I spent most of the morning over there watching for a chance. I went through everything in his room and finally through the books."

I smiled thoughtfully. "But how did you know he went through the cellar the night he murdered Richard?"

Dirck smiled. "Patrick, good old Patrick, was in the cellar sleeping off a drunk. Kimball didn't know it, but Patrick came to and saw him as he walked through. You see, Richard was already dead when Mr. Kimball and the detective took a look around the house. Richard's light was still on, and Kimball, according to the detective, leaned in the doorway and said something and of course the man thought he was talking with his nephew. I thought he might have gone through the cellar. He wouldn't have taken a chance on passing the detective in the shop, so I asked Patrick and he told me this afternoon. And Kimball overheard us, I am sure, that's why the poor fellow got knocked out. I think Kimball really meant to kill him."

"And Mary Ann and I had lunch—" I stopped. "You may as well tell me about Mary Ann. What did she have to do with this?"

Dirck lit a fresh cigarette. "Mary Ann is a very pretty girl
