Betrothal Told To Lebanon Friends

Lebanon—Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Speal are announcing the engagement and coming marriage of their daughter, Olevia Margaret, to George Bideley Hobbs. The ceremony will be performed at St. Edwards Catholic church, Sunday afternoon, June 2, at four o'clock with the Rev. Father Martin Bohrofen officiating. A reception will follow in the social hall.

Hospitable people who live in little houses that have no extra room for "company" and whose purses are not very deep, will surely have great sympathy for the writer of this letter: "When relatives, whom we love dearly, stop off in town to see us, and then decide to stay over for several days, are we expected to pay for their reservations in a hotel since the limitations of our three-room apartment will not allow putting them up here at home? The trouble is we'd like to, and we have stayed with them no end of times. But this expense would certainly put real hardship on our already back-broken budget. Do you think that they could possibly think us grasping in taking everything from them and not giving anything in return?"

The answer to all questions about paying the hotel bills of one's friends is that ordinarily you are not expected to assume this obligation. When you write to invite people to come and make you a visit and you haven't room for them at home, you explain this fully when you invite them and say that you want them to be your guests at the Jackson House, where you will take rooms for them. In this case, you do of course pay for their rooms. But according to your account, it seems to me that your situation is quite different. It must be plain to your relatives that you can't ask them to stay in your apartment. And if you have very limited means, they must also have some idea of this.

As a matter of fact, I can't imagine anything that would make them feel more uncomfortable than your not taking their paying of their own hotel bill for granted. There are undoubtedly other ways in which expenditure of effort instead of money will add to the pleasure of their visit. If you can't even invite them to meals, you can at least ask them to tea and meet them in other words, if you do willingly and graciously whatever you can, and make no pretense of doing what you can't, that is what will best please most people.

Young Man Asks About Manners

Dear Mrs. Post: Please tell me whether you think it impossible for a boy to blow the horn of his car to signal for a girl to come out of her house? Would this be different for A and B situations: A—when she expects him and they are late, and B—when he is just dropping around unexpectedly to invite her to go with him to visit friends she knows.

Answer: (A) Questionable. (B) Impossible.
