Pantry Patter

"What does the word 'dunking' mean," asked a foreign friend. "I could not find it in the dictionary." I suppose this is a purely American term, although it is probably of Pennsylvania Dutch origin. When I tried to define the word, I, of course, immediately thought of doughnuts, but when I told him that they were dipped in coffee, he immediately answered, "But I thought it was not polite in this country to dip things into coffee." Perhaps it is not, but it is fun to break any rule some time.

Speaking of dunking and doughnuts together, we usually think of those of the cruller type. Raised doughnuts are seldom to be seen in restaurants, because they do not hold up so well as the others. A good cruller-doughnut should be tender, but not so rich that it will crack when fried in deep fat. The fat, by the way, should not be too hot as the rings of dough must be given time enough to cook through-out, while they are browning on both sides. They should be turned frequently during cooking.

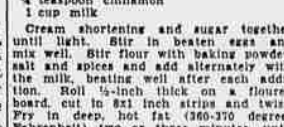

Doughnuts
4 cups sifted flour
4 teaspoons baking powder
1 teaspoon salt
1/4 teaspoon nutmeg
1/4 teaspoon cinnamon
1 cup sugar
2 eggs, well beaten
3 tablespoons shortening, melted
1 cup milk
1/4 cup shortening
1 cup milk

Mix and sift flour, baking powder, salt and spices. Add sugar to eggs, beating until light. Stir in shortening, roll quarter inch thick, cut with milk. Turn out on floured board, roll quarter inch thick, cut with doughnut cutter. Fry in deep, hot fat, 365 degrees Fahrenheit, until brown. Drain on soft paper.

Crullers
1 cup sugar
2 eggs, well beaten
4 cups sifted flour
4 teaspoons baking powder
1 teaspoon salt
1/4 teaspoon nutmeg
1/4 teaspoon cinnamon
1 cup milk

Cream shortening and sugar together until light. Stir in beaten eggs and mix well. Stir flour with baking powder, salt and spices and add alternately with the milk, beating well after each addition. Roll 1/4-inch thick on a floured board, cut in 2 1/2 inch circles and twist. Fry in deep, hot fat (360-370 degrees Fahrenheit) two or three minutes, until lightly browned, turning crullers when they rise to the top and several times during cooking. Drain on soft paper.
