Casual Slaughters

By VIRGINIA HANSON

YESTERDAY, Julia indignantly insisted that Jeff would never harm Sandra. The morning after the party Ray finds Sandra murdered. Jeff is out under arrest.

Chapter 31

"Like a Wax Model"

They had looked after me, Felicia and Gerald. Gerald himself attending to the unpleasant business of making sure that Sandra was past help, then sending for the doctor and the commanding officer. I have said that it was late when I rose. The officers who lived in the building had gone to duty. There were only the three of us, the three outsiders, left with murder.

Felicia, when she heard the news, had looked as ghastly as I felt. Genuine horror is difficult to fake. Looking back on it now, I felt sure she had been utterly shocked. But Gerald?

Gerald was no longer the posturing idiot. His eyes were cold and wary, his manner businesslike. The clowning was a mask that he took off, and without it he seemed hard and ruthless. I was suddenly afraid of him.

He was in my room what seemed a long time before he went to telephone, but he came back to Felicia and me to wait for the doctor and Colonel Pennant.

"Odd that you heard nothing in the night," he said in the clipped, dispassionate accent that belonged to the strange, new manner. His eyes, revealing nothing, regarded me.

"But I did," I told him, surprised. "There was someone moving about in my sitting room. I thought it was Sandra."

"At what time?"

"I don't know. I had been asleep. I don't know how long. And I went to sleep again. I didn't think to look at my watch."

He stood up abruptly. There were voices in the corridor.

"Wait here—I'll be back."

After he had joined those men in the hall, Felicia opened the door a crack and applied herself frankly to peeping and eavesdropping.

"Jeff's here," she whispered once. "He looks like a wax model of himself. . . . They've got the post photographer taking pictures." And later, "They're taking her away. Oh, the poor kid! I heard Doc Jones say she's been dead at least eight hours."

Captain Jones came presently and took my pulse, said I was all right but to lie still for a while. Colonel Pennant came in, looking pretty grim, announced that Mimi would call me up and, with a glance at Felicia, that he would question me later, at his quarters.

I did not see Jeff, and I was glad.

here—except a stenographer's notebook once, to take some dictation from me."

"Where is it?"

"I suppose she took it away with her."

I don't know just when I began to resent his questions, or to want to get out of that room where I
