

Old Time Linn Residents Are Honored at Lebanon

Fall Festival Brings Prizes! Projects Open

Lebanon—This city was host Saturday to hundreds of rural residents attending Lebanon's annual harvest festival. A large proportion of the crowds were "old-timers", who were paid special honor at the affair. The weather was ideal for the occasion.

The older residents registered at a booth set up in the Odd Fellows hall, under the direction of the Civic club. They were greeted by William Brown, well known old-timer. Free theater tickets were presented farmers and farm housewives who have been engaged in their occupations for 50 years or more.

Prizes were awarded the following, who, among the registrants have followed their respective vocations the longest in the county: H. H. Hayes, 76, mechanic for 50 years; Mrs. C. Amos, 71, school teacher 23 years; Bert Cotton, 59, 34 years as a merchant; Elder George Simons, 71, a minister 40 years; Mrs. Lucy Stoops, 88, housewife 71 years; James W. Swank, 92, 68 years a farmer.

The six winners were introduced in the afternoon during the course of a platform entertainment at which L. E. Arnold was master of ceremonies. Arnold interviewed several of the old-timers among the crowd. Ray Gleason, commander of the Legion post which sponsored the festival, introduced Arnold.

Exhibits in the handicraft, flower, agricultural and antique displays were of unusually high quality, according to those in charge.

A free dance was held in the Legion hall in the evening.

Lebanon—Employment on the local NYA project is available for six to ten local youths from 17 to 24 years of age, according to W. H. Baillies of the local employment office. That, or enrollment in the specialized NYA training school in Eugene is the alternative.

Work is now under way on the house, the barn and other outbuildings having been demolished the first part of the week.

An opportunity also waits young women, unemployed and between the ages of 18 and 25 under NYA which has established a resident work center where eligible girls will learn the care of the mildly ill, or care of the chronic, convalescent, handicapped or aged persons; the care of the home during illness or absence of the mother and the care of children and home management.

Approximately half of each day will be spent working in institutions and hospitals in and around Salem and for these services each girl will earn enough to pay for board, room and medical care and $8 per month for incidental expenses.

Applications for such training will be received at the local office and Ivan Munro, state administrator, will interview those eligible.

School Values Show Increase

Albany—With two exceptions assessed valuations of Linn county school districts have increased during the last year, provided gains are not offset by public utility valuation losses. County Assessor W. C. Templeton announced Saturday.

The utility valuations are determined not by the assessor, but by the state tax commission and the commission has not yet reported its findings.

The greatest aggregate increase is credited to Albany school district No. 5, whose valuations has gained $70,330 and now stands at $3,423,700. Greatest proportionate gain, however, is that of Lebanon which enjoyed a 567,780, to a present valuation of $1,085,100.

Gains reported for seven districts were partially offset by losses in as many more, due largely to cutting of timber in eastern Linn county.

Teachers Miss Word Barrage

Perrydale—Openly preparing for a bombardment of words to send into a large audience, the teachers of the Perrydale school were much relieved when informed they did not have to give their orations for the opening community club program held at the school auditorium Thursday evening.

Since it is the custom for all teachers of the school to say a few words for the main feature of the first community meeting of the year, the members of the faculty were introduced and brought to the platform. Wayne Novak, principal, said a few words.

Novak said that several new courses, including journalism, home economics, music appreciation and a school orchestra, have been added to the number of courses offered by the school.

Four sewing machines have already been purchased for use of the Home Economics classes, he said, and of a new building for a combination manual training shop and school bus shed that would soon be completed and ready for use.

Other features were two talks by Boy Scouts from the Salem district, under the direction of their Scout master; two accordion solos by Nolan McKee; two violin solos by Ernest Schmidt; two piano solos by the new primary teacher of the school, Miss Doris Truby; a play, entitled "Sardines," by the Women's club of Perrydale, and a poem, by Jimmie Gibson.

After the program refreshments were served.
