

King Thankful For American Aid to Britain

ceremony in the house of lords clad in the uniform of an admiral of the fleet.

Queen Present

Queen Elizabeth accompanied him, wearing a gown and coat of deep purple. The ceremony was shown of much of its customary pomp because of the war.

The king made his opening four-minute address in firm measured tones, declaring that the relations of the British government with the United States "could not be more cordial." He said he had learned "with the utmost satisfaction" of an "ever increasing volume" of munitions of war arriving from America.

"It is good to know in these fateful times how widely shared are the ideals of ordered freedom, justice and security," the monarch said.

The king also revealed his "gratification" at the exchange of British defense bases for American destroyers. He said in the speech read by Lord Simon that he hoped the bases would "serve to defend the heritage of free men."

Greeks Praised

Churchill said "the valiant and sudden uprising" of the Greeks had already "almost purged" their soil of an attack which he described as "pure and unmitigated brigandage."

The prime minister expressed hope that Britain would be able to give from her resources, "always heavily strained," a "helpful measure of assistance to the Greeks" and that "we shall be able to discharge our responsibility to Egypt in defending its soil and guarding the vital artery of the Suez canal."

"Even if the whole of the homes all over the country are levelled," Churchill said, "we shall still be found all standing together and we shall build them up again after the fighting is over."

He urged the house of commons not to lose sight of its democratic duty of "giving guidance to the nation and, if necessary, correction to the executive."

Parliament, he said, stood as custodian of the people's "sundered liberties," and "its most sacred duty will be to restore them in their fullness when victory has crowned our exertions and our perseverance."

Time Here to Fight Gladiolus Thrip

Gladiolus growers, whether they have just a few in the flower beds or thousands in commercial plantings, should dig all volunteer bulbs and either destroy or treat them and should also burn the tops from the fields.

Other wise thrips will winter through, warns C. A. Cole, horticulturist with the state department of agriculture.

"We have found live thrips both in young and adult stages in the field during the winter," Cole explains.

Several treatments for gladiolus thrips are effective if directions are carefully followed, probably the best from a popular standpoint being the naphthalene flakes method, which is safe both for the user and for the gladiolus.

Many commercial growers use the calcium cyanide (fumigant G) treatment, the fumes of which are deadly poison to man and animal.

For the naphthalene flakes method, which is both cheap and effective, use the flakes at the rate of one ounce (four level tablespoons) for every 100 corms or one pound to 2,000 corms.

Small lots of bulbs may be placed in paper bags or cartons, large lots in trays and the flakes sprinkled over the corms. Tops of containers should be closed to retain the fumes.

Corms should be left in the naphthalene flake treatment not less than four weeks at a temperature of not less than 60 degrees F., and may remain in the flakes all winter provided the bulbs are shaken out one month before planting time and corms allowed to air out.

Thanksgiving Observed in Pilgrim Style

Seattle, Nov. 21 (AP)—Superior Judge William G. Long and his family are spending this Thanksgiving day in true Pilgrim style, beside a campfire on Whidby Island.

The meat for their noonday feast depends upon the prowess of the family's "mighty hunters" (the Judge and his two teen-age boys) with their shotguns. But if no rabbits or ducks were forthcoming, the dinner will have a main course of—clams.

Winding up his court affairs yesterday afternoon before leaving in the cold rain to drive to the island north of here on Puget Sound, Judge Long, juvenile court judge and active sportsman here, said:

"It's an annual affair. We really become Pilgrims. We take three shotguns, flashlights, sleeping blankets and all the trimmings for a Thanksgiving day dinner, such as pumpkin pie, potatoes, vegetables, olives and the like.

"But no meat. Tonight we'll hunt rabbits with flashlights. If we don't shoot any, then eat tomorrow. I'll see what I can do about some ducks. In the meantime, though, there will be a nice clam tide and if we have no meat, we'll eat clams."

His wife, Maude, and two daughters, Louise, 20, and Marion, 18, and their two sons, Al, 14, and William, Jr., 12, accompanied him. Al shot his first buck deer earlier this fall.

The family loves outdoor life. This summer the father, his children and some friends' children spent two weeks hiking across part of the Olympic peninsula wilderness and he appeared at his courtroom chambers on his return bearded and bedraggled, to the amusement and admiration of his friends.

Agriculture Report Shows Work Growing

Increased activity for all divisions is shown in the fourth biennial report of the state department of agriculture, covering the work for the two years ending June 30, 1940. Copies of the report, which shows the importance of agricultural pursuits to the state, are now being distributed.

A new feature is a section devoted to short discussions by experts of newer phases and trends in the Oregon agricultural scene. Other sections are devoted to division reports and show a considerable amount of statistical information.

Financial reports of the department, including both appropriation revenues and expenses and income and outgo from the self-sustaining activities of the department for the biennium are included as is also a financial statement of the state farms held in the two-year period.

Auto Accidents Fatal to Four

Portland, Nov. 21 (AP)—Four persons died in Oregon in pre-Thanksgiving day road accidents last night.

Near The Dalles, Charles Wheeler, 26, a government employe at the Celilo canal project on the Columbia river, lost his life as a train struck his automobile. The car was dragged 200 feet. Wheeler was the son of Mrs. Nancy Wheeler, Aberdeen, Wash.

Two automobiles crashed head-on in a heavy rain in the outskirts of Portland last night, killing Ruben Kaser, 47, Gresham, Ore., and Ray Donald Owen, 20, Portland. Three were injured; Howard Owen, 22, brother of Ray, head cut; Mary Huffman, 16, Portland, leg and facial injuries; Fern Mergo, 50, Gresham, leg and skull fractures.

Max Blohm, 26, of Ocean Park, Calif., lost his life near Klamath Falls. His automobile skidded on icy pavement of The Dalles-California highway into a logging truck, then veered into a tree. Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Callahan, Ocean Park, required hospitalization but a fourth occupant, Jack Rossen, suffered only minor injuries. The logging truck turned over in a ditch but the driver escaped injury.

West Salem Plans Charity Campaign

West Salem, Nov. 21—The Woman's club of West Salem and the local community club will sponsor a charity campaign to help needy people of this town so that food, clothes or toys may be provided for them for Christmas. Members of the two clubs would like to obtain the names of deserving families needing assistance.

Fruit, Vegetables Much on Move

More carloads of fruits and vegetables moved out of Oregon in October than in the corresponding month a year ago and than in the previous month, the state department of agriculture reports.

Compilation of the federal-state shipping point inspections. The October figures show the first four months of the current inspection period 1490 carloads above the same period in 1939.

Carload inspections for October, 1940, were 3212 1/2 and truck inspections 1098 compared with 2409 1/2 carloads and 1259 truckloads a year ago, and 2266 carloads and 466 truckloads in September, 1940.

Potatoes led the October, 1940, inspections with 1207 1/2 carloads, and pears were next with 814 carloads. Lettuce shipments, mostly from the Malheur county fields, reached an all-time high of 395 1/2 cars. Carloads of apples inspected numbered 380 1/2 and of onions 286 1/2.
