Pantry Patter

Blazing plum pudding has centuries of tradition back of it and yet this Christmas delicacy is a development from a plum porridge which in some English households was served as a first course not much more than a century ago.

During Cromwell's time the dissenters refused to eat either mince pie or pudding and it was probably a number of years after the settlement of New England that these desserts returned to the Puritan table. Originally puddings were of course boiled in bags and were, therefore, of irregular shape.

A large pudding should be re-steamed in its covered mold about an hour in order to be thoroughly heated. After it is turned out of the mold, it should be covered with a high-proof brandy so that it will really blaze when set alight. In prohibition days, it was pretty difficult to get much of a flame!

Now about the sauce. You either like it hard or you like it soft. In any case, make just about twice as much as you think you will need. If you do have any left over, you may keep it to use another day with left-over plum pudding or any kind of steamed pudding. The recipes for the sauces which we like best are printed today.

Eggnog Sauce
1 cup sifted confectioners' sugar
2 egg yolks, well beaten
2 tablespoons brandy or sherry
1 cup melted butter
Stir sugar gradually into well-beaten egg yolks. Beat in brandy or sherry. Fold in whipped cream. Serve with hot puddings. Yield: Ten servings.

Celia Tuttle's Christmas Sauce
1 cup sifted powdered sugar
2 egg yolks, well beaten
1 cup melted butter
1 teaspoon vanilla extract or 2 ts. blueberries sherry
1 cup heavy cream, whipped
Stir in sugar gradually to well-beaten egg yolks. Beat in butter and vanilla extract or sherry. Fold in whipped cream. Serve with hot puddings. Yield: Ten servings.

Note—Any leftover sauce may be stored in a covered jar in the refrigerator and should be beaten well before serving.

Style No. 2737 is designed for sizes 2, 4, 6 and 8 years. Size 4 requires 1 1/2 yards of 35-inch fabric for the dress with 1/2 yard for the jerkin.

GOOD TASTE TODAY
By Emily Post

Of "rumors" that run to the extreme of absurdity there is no end. But of all these absurdities, a letter which tells me "It is rumored that engagement rings are no longer fashionable" is the final straw! Having a ring or not having a ring has nothing whatever to do with the validity of an engagement—in the way that a wedding ring has to do with marriage. A man does not say "With this ring I announce we are engaged" without rings but they can't very well get married without the wedding ring nor go to house-keeping without furniture! The placing of an engagement ring on the finger of his best-beloved is, it is true, a treasured sentiment to most people! But if money is lacking, the widespread fashion for conspicuously large jewels may be discouraging to those whose pocket-books cannot stretch beyond a solitaire that is invisibly small.

Another reason why it may be possible that engagement rings are bought less often than formerly (if this is true) is that there is a craze for a diamond band wedding ring. Since this costs much more than a plain gold circle, many girls who can't have both rings prefer to do without the engagement ring. Then too, there are a certain few—very few—who dislike rings and refuse to wear even a wedding ring. But this is a personal idiosyncrasy, not a fashion!

Family Loyalty
Dear Mrs. Post: My sister has been separated from her husband, but is not divorced. The other day I was walking with her on the street when we passed some of her husband's relatives. I have always been friendly to these people so I greeted them and stopped a moment to exchange a few words. My sister smiled to them and walked on. Later she told me that I had hurt her very much by my disloyalty to her. Should I have snubbed these people because of her differences with them?

Answer: To have bowed to them cordially would have been courteous enough. Stopping to speak to them while your sister was forced to walk on alone was a strange impulse on your part—certainly not akin to loyalty nor to good taste.

China vs. Silver
Dear Mrs. Post: If one does not have a silver tea service and wants to give a big tea party, what is the next best?

Answer: China can be quite as lovely as silver. But you will have to have a big water kettle which, if not of silver, has to be of metal. But perhaps you can borrow a big kettle from someone when you give this party.
