Chapter 29
Visit to Calabrese

Shortly afterwards they were sitting together in a small tearoom a few doors from the shop. Elsie was so imbued with her own thoughts she forgot to ask Noel about herself. After he'd ordered, she confided to Noel:

"I'm to be married next month. He's not making much money—but he's so brilliant."

"Who is he?" Noel wanted to know.

"Tommy Sheldon," Elsie explained with a glow in her eyes, which Noel envied.

"Tommy? How wonderful." Noel was seeing Tommy as someone quite different from Elsie, the stolid Tommy with his weaknesses—Elsie with her strength.

"I think it's grand," she told Elsie.

After she left her, Noel was lonely. Elsie had Tommy; Anita had Douglas. Everybody in the world, except her, belonged to someone. She was so alone now.

Because Noel had promised Feigel's secretary, she called the Criterion office in New York. Told them where she was staying—and thought how silly, as if anything would ever come out of that stupid screen test.

After a dull evening alone in the suite—eating her salad for dinner, wondering what to do with her time, Noel awoke to a hot summer morning. She wished she were back in Galena. At least it was cool there—and peaceful.

The morning papers carried no advertisement for "Susan is Waiting." That was strange! On impulse, Noel took a cab down to the Dryden Theater. The house had a deserted look, as if hopefully waiting for a new tenant. The sign for "Susan is Waiting" was still there, a bleak dusty outline in the unlighted bulbs. Old Joe would be at the stage door. A strange man loitering in the alley looked at her suspiciously as she approached.

"Are any of the 'Susan is Waiting' company inside?" Noel asked politely.

"I closed last week," came the indifferent reply.

Suddenly Noel knew she had to see Douglas Swanson. He would be able to help her. She would tell him about seeing Anita in Hollywood—about the screen test she'd taken at Criterion Studios.

On the way over Noel met Gerald Foster.

"Hello, Noel!" Gerald was obviously delighted at the meeting.

"What about the play?" Noel had to know quickly.

"Just one of those things," Gerald had the actor's pretense of philosophical acceptance. "One week the business was swell. Suddenly it just petered out—and there we were back on the pavements again. I suppose we should be grateful for having it last as long as it did."

At the Swanstrom offices, Douglas' secretary greeted Noel cordially, not hiding her surprise at the unexpected visit.

"Is Mr. Swanstrom in?" Noel asked casually. Douglas spent most of his days and nights in the office, she knew.

"He left for Hollywood on this morning's plane," was the dismaying news.

"Mr. Foster wants you to call him on the coast immediately."

The message came to Noel next day from the New York offices. Feigel's probably furious at me. Noel thought as she followed the New York office's suggestion and put in the call for Hollywood. And he was, as soon as he spoke with her.

"Why didn't you stay here, like I told you to?" he asked impatiently.

"I thought you'd forgotten about me," Noel explained half-heartedly. She didn't say, "I couldn't stand it—the waiting in Hollywood when everything was so uncertain."

"Come out—at once!" Feigel's voice was arrogant. "Take the next plane here. We'll sign the contract when you arrive."

special interviews with writers from the papers and fan magazines. All the while Noel was thinking: They're funny people, this movie crowd. I haven't signed the contract yet. That didn't seem very businesslike to her. Douglas would have had her name on the dotted line first.

"What about your romance with David Norris?" one of the interviewers asked Noel.

Noel's face showed her resentment. "That was all imaginary, wasn't it, Miss Marchand?" He smiled knowingly at the reporter.

Feigel evidently changed his mind frequently. From "taking the first plane," Noel found herself busy for several days, at the whims and schemes of the New York office.

"We're leaving tomorrow," Bill Smith said casually one morning as though he were telling Noel, "You're having luncheon with an interviewer."

To save the expense of issuing special delivery stamps Mexico has imprinted "1940" on an old regular issue depicting a motorcycle messenger and will use them.
