Room and Board.....By Gene Ahern

Magic Spring.....By Allen Eppes

YESTERDAY: David Wiley just has been left an old inn by his aunt, and at the same time she made him promise to marry Polly Jenkins. David did not want the inn, and he did not want Polly. On his way to propose once more to Polly, however, he ran into Margo Powers, back from Europe, and in spite of himself he could not keep from thinking of her. Now he and Polly are driving out to the dilapidated inn.

Chapter 3
The Inn
"I know," said David. "I feel the same way. But just before Aunt Julia died, she said she thought we ought to get married right away. She had the right idea, too, Polly. I think—"

"Let's not talk about it now, David," Polly cut in. "Let's just relax a little, and enjoy our ride. I know it's got to be settled sometime, but I'm tired. Aunt Susan wasn't so well last night, and I didn't get much sleep."

"Seems to me," said David, "that one of us is always having to look after someone—if we aren't trying to put someone else to sleep. I'm getting darned sick of it."

"You mustn't feel that way about it, David," she said gently. "Things will be better, from now on; now that you've got that good job down at the lumber plant. Mr. Powers likes you. He said so the other day when he came in for lunch."

"You mean he eats at the tea-room?" David said.
"Sometimes, yes. A number of business men do. I don't blame him either. I should think it would be awfully lonely, going up to that big Powers house on the hill to eat lunch all by myself."

"Only Mr. Powers won't have to do that now," said David. "Margo got home last night."

"She did?" How do you know?
"I ran into her."

"Where?"
"At the intersection of Main Street and Oak," said David. "In fact I ran into her almost literally. He grinned, and then explained what he meant. 'Margo's not a bit like the skinny, carrot-top girl you and I used to see in public school.'"

"Really?" said Polly, interested. "Just what is she like, or didn't you have time to see?"
"Oh, I had time enough for that," said David. "She came over to bawl me out, and then got to talking. He hesitated a moment, started to say that Margo looked like something beautiful out of Hollywood, and changed his mind. 'She's okay.'"

"Margo ought to be just about perfect," said Polly. "If opportunities and advantages mean anything."

"I'll admit she's not at all bad on the eyes," said David. "But after all, it's character that counts in the end; and how do we know Margo's matches her looks?"
Polly didn't bother to reply to that.

She relaxed against the worn upholstery of the car and gazed dreamily before her.
"Just think, David," she said. "Margo has seen and done practically all the things we've dreamed and talked of seeing and doing. While you and I stayed in Ardendale and hoped and planned, she went out and saw the world. Ever since her mother died, Margo's been on the go; governesses, finishing schools, Paris, London, and—"
