Who Killed Aunt Maggie? By MEDORA FIELD

Frivolous Search For there was only Bill himself, grim enough in his struggle to extricate himself from the wreckage of what had been one of a pair of beautiful Chinese Chippendale gilt mirrors. Two chairs and a table, apparently, had been pretty well mixed up in the melee, the tall vase of gladioli had been upset but had not broken and flowers and glass from the mirror were scattered in all directions.

man. That looks like a pretty bad bump on your head, too. "But what happened in the hall?" I had to know. "I never heard such carrying-on in all my life."

"Watch out, don't get cut," Bill warned, as I rushed forward to fling myself upon him, crying out to know if he was badly hurt.

"No," said Bill morosely. "That was the trouble. I couldn't see anything, but I am sure it was a man, for whoever it was gave me a hefty shove to one side. I lost my balance and I think I crashed into a chair. Anyway, all the furniture on the place seemed to gang up on me."

"Yes, here at the foot of the stairs."

"I threw out my arms, grabbing with both hands, to try to break my fall and my right hand struck that confounded mirror and brought it down on top of me. Practically brained me and didn't help my hand either," he complained, bitterly, taking stock of his injuries.

"Well, let's don't stand here then," Bill cried, galvanizing into action in spite of his injuries. "I ran into somebody. Let's go after him."

"All right," Kirk agreed with alacrity. "But, which way do you think he went? I saw no one."

"I don't know," Bill admitted dazedly, putting his hand to his head. "I was right at the bottom step. Probably he went through the dining-room door. That's nearest the stairs. I'll go that way and you go through the breakfast room. Sally, stay in the library. If anyone comes in, hit 'em as hard as you can with that poker and yell like hell."

"Oh, dear, I'm so sorry," I lamented. "And it was my great-grandmother's mirror, too. But what can we do about your head?"

"What's going on down there?" in Bob's voice, which sounded quite agitated, while Eve inquired acidly whether anybody ever slept in this house. Looking upward, I could see the tiny flames of their candles pricking the darkness overhead.

"Put me on a pretty spot," said Bill. "Here, I wake up and you are missing. I call but get no answer. So I have to go through all that rigamarole of getting a light. And not a candle anywhere. I look in the bathroom. Nobody home. Then I find the hall door unlocked."

"I was still in the hall, the lamp which Kirk had handed over to me swaying at an angle of goodness knows how many degrees, when Bob reached the late battlefield. "Gosh," he exclaimed, "what a stambled! How many killed and wounded!"

"Here you are, old man," said Bob, back from his quest for first-aid materials. "Do you mean to say this thing you ran into had hair on him?"

"You'd better warn Bill and Kirk," I cautioned, "or you may get killed. They told me to stay in the library. Don't let them mistake you for the murderer."

"I remarked, applying a guest towel, soaked in alcohol, to the bump on Bill's head."
