Chinese Cancel Early Gains of Japanese

(This daily feature, conducted by DeWitt MacKenzie, Wide World war analyst. Is written in his absence today, by Glen Babb.)

The five-year-old war in China recently has undergone a

350 N. High St.—Raymond Garage, startling change. Three months ago the Japanese opened a campaign that some feared might knock China out of the war. Six weeks ago most of east-central*

China seemed to be falling into their hands. But today a large back. The mid-section of the

> Their proudly-announced plan same time the Chinese to establish an all-rail connec-tion between Shanghai and Singapore definitely is on the shelf. New Phase Looms

It still is too early to say whether this is the result primarily of reinvigorated Chinese striking power or of change of the Japanese army's plans either case, however, evidence points to the early opening of a new phase of the Pacific war. taking the form either of a bold new Japanese stroke or of the passing of the initiative in China from Japanese hands.

Our information thus far comes entirely from the Chinese. The Japanese are silent about what is happening in Kiangsi and Chekiang provinces, where when things are not going well for them or they are plotting something new. Briefly, the Chinese picture of the situation is this:

Picture in China In mid-May the Japanese, using perhaps 200,000 men, began coordinated attacks south westward from Hangchow, in Chekiang province, and southeastward from Nanchang, in Kiangsi, driving from either end of the Chekian-Kiangsi railway The avowed objectives were to seize all the railway and take half a dozen cities which the Japanese believed to be sites of Col. At the threatening several of those bitterly contested airbase towns, any one of which might be a Shangri La for a repetition of General Doolittle's Tokyo raid. These include Yushan in Klangsi and Chuhsien, Lishui and Kinhwa in Cheklang. Moving to Siberia

Even while their communiques record the resurgence of their forces, Chungking military authorities have their fingers crossed. They keep in view the possibility that the Japanese are fighting merely rearguard actions while taking out the best of their assault troops for use elsewhere, perhaps Siberia, perhavs far southern China. There Japanese forces recently in the most marked change has come about, as is their wont nese are preparing to meet a possible assault on their south ern border, perhaps on Kwangsi province. The Japanese have had little luck in their southern campaigns against China this year and may be looking for, a new field of operations.
