

Hop Growers Voice Appeal For Pickers

Independence—The hop harvest of the independence area is ripe and ready for picking, and is threatened this year for the second time in history, with probable loss through lack of harvest help, which requires nearly 15,000 pickers in this area alone.

Growers, in the last 20 years, have come to depend largely on migratory workers to get in their crops. From every state in the west, the cars were wont to come, bearing vacationists and workers intent on making good wages for a short time.

This migratory help proved adequate over two decades, but last year and this these people have found other work to do. The war work has drawn most of the workers to their rescue. The townspeople in the hop picking areas are out in the fields helping with this crop, but there are not enough of them, hence growers are appealing to other workers throughout the state.

Pickers are making good wages this year, and are getting $2.50 per 100 pounds. Women and older children, deft with their hands, frequently can pick 600 pounds each in a day. For those who do not like the picking work, the growers have plenty of day jobs open.

Camping facilities are thoroughly inspected and most comfortable. Growers lend every assistance in caring for the welfare of their pickers.
