

Overloaded Trucks Must Jettison Cargo on Road

The state highway commission announced today that state police would require overloaded logging and commercial trucks to pull off the highways and that overloads would be removed. Furthermore, the commission will report violations to the office of price administration, which will subject the violators to reduced gasoline allotments and might prevent them from getting new tires.

The new policy was decided at a conference Tuesday of representatives of the highway commission, state police, public utilities commissioner, Governor Snell, and the offices of price administration and defense transportation.

In the past, the commission has reported violations to the public utilities commissioner for cancellation of permits, while small fines were imposed by justices of the peace.

Fines Not Enough

The fines, the commission said, are no deterrent, while cancellation of permits has imposed penalties which are too severe. The commission cited cases where an entire fleet of trucks was suspended merely because one of the trucks had been overloaded.

Some truckers are persistent and chronic violators of the weight limits, but 85 percent of them are cooperating, the commission said.

The commission, pointing out that the legislature boosted the weight limits from 54,000 to 71,000 pounds and the length limits from 50 to 60 feet, for the duration of the war, said:

"The commission feels that in granting this additional privilege, the commercial haulers must stay within the limits set forth and will likewise insist that overloaded commercial trucks be stopped and required to take off the overload."

"The commission feels that the overload problem must be solved if the state's highways are to last for the duration of the war and, after conferring with Washington authorities, knows it is giving as much or more cooperation with the truck operators as its neighboring state is. The commission wants to do all in its power, in this wartime emergency affecting transportation, to expedite the movement of goods and services but can not be unmindful of its duty to the citizens of this state in protecting the public's large investment in highways."

Elda Russell Offers Plan

Elda Russell of Portland, supervisor of the Oregon Protective society and chairman of Gov. Earl Snell's juvenile delinquency committee, today submitted policy committee recommendations for the governor's approval.

The committee advised it would serve as a clearing house for juvenile problems and would

Sailor Brings Island Papers

E. Robert Olson, 469 North Winter, who is with the United States merchant marine and who has sailed widely in the South Pacific, is home for a time, and has with him interesting copies of newspapers published in that part of the world, particularly Australia and New Zealand.

The Dominion, published at Wellington, New Zealand, is a large and no doubt prosperous newspaper, but a quaint one compared with American papers.

For example, the first, second and third pages are entirely advertising, classified on the first two. Other than ads the first matter the reader finds is the editorial. News of lesser importance, mainly local, is on the editorial page. On page five you begin to run into the war news, with a good many label heads that were old-fashioned in this country 40 years ago, like "Greatest Dual Onslaught" and "Weary and Below Strength"—no verbs or implication of verbs. Pages are eight columns, but wider than American sheets.

The Sun, published in Melbourne, is tabloid size and in appearance much the same as tabloids in this country. It claims the largest net sale in Australia—287,497.

Guinea Gold is in American and Australian editions, and published "In the Field." It is largely war news, and news about men in the service.

The Tribune-Herald, published at Hilo, Hawaii, is, of course, typically American in style and content.

Fatality Occurs On Pacific Highway
Roseburg, Jan. 21 (AP) — A head-on collision fatally injured James D. McCarthy, Oakland, Calif., Thursday on the Pacific highway five miles south of Roseburg.

McCarthy's automobile collided with a north-bound car occupied by five Grants Pass mechanics en route to Roseburg to repair a freight truck. Only one of them was injured, Max R. Garrett, who was treated for minor hurts at a hospital here.
