Soy Beans Require Long Growing Season
Aurora—According to J. J. Inskeep, Clackamas county agent, soy beans are definitely not recommended for commercial planting as they take a long growing season and are susceptible to frost, but they are all right to plant a few in the victory garden.

County Agent Inskeep further points out that if soy beans are planted, if the soil is not pressed out of them, after they are harvested, and there are no processing plants here, the flour soon becomes rancid. Home growers would do well, when making their own flour, to grind only a little at a time, he says.
