For more than half a century the national society of the Daughters of the American Revolution has held its annual continental congress, as its convention is called, during the week of April 19—anniversary of the Revolutionary war battles of Lexington and Concord.

This spring, for the first time in the society's 54-year-old history, there will be no continental congress because of the wartime difficulties of transportation and housing.

The congress, originally planned for Chicago because the society's national headquarters in Washington, D. C., have been almost entirely turned over to the American Red Cross during the war, was cancelled earlier in the spring at the request of the office of defense transportation.

Because of that cancellation, national officers whose terms would have expired this year, will hold office until another spring or until such time as another conference can be held. Among them is Mrs. Howard P. Arnest of Portland, one of the vice-presidents-general. Mrs. Arnest, only vice-president from the western region, was one of six whose terms normally end in 1945. She has been in office since 1942.

Mrs. Ralph Eggstaff will entertain with a desert bridge party at her home Wednesday evening in compliment to members of her contract club.
