Bees Select Main Street For Swarming

Dallas—It was a good show (an annual performance) and nobody got stung.

A swarm of bees picked the center of Main street at the Court street intersection to settle and disrupt traffic one morning this week. They finally swarmed on the rear fender of an old model car parked nearby after hundreds of the insects had buzzed around and startled passing motorists.

E. B. Hamilton, manager of the Dallas office, U. S. employment service, assigned himself to the job and with a helper, scooped up the bees into a cardboard carton.

An unused chimney in the Hyde and Long building seems to be the home of the little buzzers and from there they make their yearly spring sorties.
