

Housing Shortage to Limit Attendance at Colleges

(By the Associated Press)
Prospective students at Oregon colleges and universities may be on tenterhooks until the last minute, not certain whether they will be able to enter the school of their choice. The reason is the tremendous increase of those who plan to enter college and the lack of housing for them.

Virtually all Oregon institutions are confronted by the same problem, but because they attract the greatest number the University of Oregon and Oregon State college have it in the most acute form.

At the University, high academic standards have been set. Out-of-state students are required to have higher qualifications than those from Oregon. This, however, has only lessened the problem; not solved it.

After clearing students academically, Clifford Constance, assistant to the registrar, reported, university-controlled housing was allocated to them on the basis of priority of applications. When the available housing was filled—and it was some time ago—the university gave qualified acceptance to those meeting the academic standards. If they can show that they can provide their own housing—with relatives, in rooming houses or otherwise—they will be accepted. If not, the university will not be open to them this fall.

Veterans, whose return to the classrooms has caused much of the problem, were given priority on new housing installed on the campus. It will accommodate about 1,000, including 200 to 300 married veterans.

At Oregon State college the picture is somewhat different. There is no requirement for advance registration as at the University. If someone—if an Oregon resident—shows up on opening day and has housing, he will be admitted if he meets entrance requirements. E. B. Lemon, dean of administration, reports.

However, the likelihood of that happening is remote, for Corvallis is jammed to the rafters. As a matter of fact, some 8,000 applications for fall enrollment already exceed by 1,500 to 2,000 the number that can be accommodated. All college-controlled living quarters are filled.

Youth Admit Prowling Cars
The sheriff's office late Wednesday apprehended and extracted admissions from five youthful delinquents under 16 years of age that they had in the last few days prowled about 40 parked automobiles, most of them in Salem. Loot taken included bathing suits, wearing apparel, gloves, flashlights, billfolds, tools and numerous other things.

Four boys with flashlights in the vicinity of the W. T. Rigdon mortuary at Chemeketa and North Cottage aroused the suspicions of two deputy sheriffs. The boys were questioned and involved the fifth boy.

Among the items taken were two checks from the car of Richard Schweinfurth of Gervais while it was parked near the Salem water office—one for $58 on the Marion-Linn Farmers Union and one for $33 on the United Growers; keys for six used cars taken from vehicles on the Valley Motor company lot; a tire and wheel from the car of David E. Dyer, route 3; and hub caps from the cars of Kenneth Smith, route 1.

The boys are in the hands of juvenile authorities.
