Three-of-a-Kind—Practical use of dresses cut to new proportionate size system is illustrated by (l to r) Alice Boyd wearing a "tall," Mildred Dudzik a "medium" and Mildred Antikainen a "short" all in size 12.

Chicago—Women who like to think they can wear "perfect" sixteen dresses may now be able to do it because the ready-to-wear industry has proportionized size ranges. The idea originated when the bureau of home economics of the department of agriculture made a tape measure census of more than 10,000 women.

It revealed that women with 46 to 47-inch busts are no taller, on the average, than women with 32-inch busts. And that, on the average, women five feet nine inches tall have the same bust line measurement as women only five feet tall.

Combining this information for practical styling, the industry devised the proportionized method of including weight and height when designating dress sizes. Each size number of a dress is made in a short, medium and tall cutout that allows for proper proportioning.

Here's the way proportionate sizes are styled:

Junior miss sizes, nine to 17, are designed with short waists and high busts.

Misses sizes, 10 to 20, are styled for the girl or woman with average waist length, of medium height and moderately small bust line. The medium hip line is proportioned to the waist line.

Women's sizes, 35 to 52, correspond to the misses size in proportions, but they are made for the mature figure with lower bust lines and proportionately larger hips.
