

Stayton Forum Being Revived

Stayton—Dale Crabtree, owner of the Western Auto store, was elected president of the Stayton Chamber of Commerce for 1946. Raymond Frey was named secretary-treasurer. The board of directors includes Roy Philippi, Gilbert Schachtsick and Kenneth Williams. The second Monday night of each month was set as the meeting time.

Plans were started six weeks ago to reactivate the Chamber of Commerce, after several years of dormancy. Up to date, 100 business men and others interested in community affairs have joined the group. City growth, the Detroit dam project and other civic problems demanding attention have created considerable interest in the organization.

Crabtree, in accepting office, stated that he was pleased that the group had placed confidence in him and that each member would have plenty of work to do in furthering the work.

Retiring officers are L. H. Wright, president; Edward J. Bell, secretary-treasurer; board of directors, Wilbur Porter, E. W. Klecker and Lee Brown.

The D. E. Nebergall Meat company is operating on a limited quota and is supplying its customers to the best of its ability with a short quota, Olin D. Nebergall, partner, announced Thursday.

"The Nebergall plant, like other plants in this territory, will stay open as long as possible under the present regulations, and will strive to keep local customers supplied with what meat is available," Nebergall said.

"One of our major problems will be to keep the dozen or so logging camps supplied with meat," the meat packer said, "as this is one of our leading industries and loggers need plenty of meat."

The butcher shops of the city are operating on a limited supply of meat, but will continue open to sell what meat they can buy and also sell lunch meats, wieners and sea foods. All butcher shop owners reported so far they have been able to supply customers with fresh fish and chickens.
