Editor Paul C. Smith Tells Legislators About Communism Representatives and senators heard Paul C. Smith, editor of the San Francisco Chronicle, declare communism is not revolutionary but, rather, reactionary. The United States, he declared, has always sustained revolutionary ideals. Seated at the right is William E. Walsh, president of the senate.

Smith Stresses Principles In Lincoln Day Speech

The future of the American nation depends upon the development of an intelligent program of moral and spiritual integrity which must be developed by the republican party.

This was the theme of a talk made by Paul C. Smith, editor of the San Francisco Chronicle, gathered at a Lincoln day banquet in the Chamber of Commerce rooms Friday night.

"There must be a resurgence in the republican party," he said. "Its principles must be hammered out on the anvil of debate if the party is to become an effective force in U. S. politics."

The San Francisco editor told the group that he felt there were trends in the national government that "must be slowed until they can be altered if we are to have a free unincumbered economy."

Smith declared that he had no regrets over the outcome of the November election maintaining that the republicans could have won if they had indulged in demagogic promises that could not be kept.

Smith reviewed the rapid development of the scientific world and held that the problem today is "to bring moral man up to par with the modern scientific man, in which the political party of which we are a part must play a role."

"The only dangerous thing about the atomic bomb is the detonator, which is explosive human behaviorism."

Among such behavior he listed class warfare, attempts to punish political enemies and refusal to yield "even at traffic intersections."

Smith was introduced by former Governor Charles A. Sprague. Orval Hager, Jr., chairman of the republican county committee presided and Harry V. Collins was toastmaster. Lincoln's Gettysburg address was read by Richard Spooner.

James Collins, retiring chairman, and who is national committeeman, mentioned that the national convention is to be held in the west this year. Whether an invitation for the convention to be held in Oregon will be accepted is not yet known.

Section Hand Held by Police

A colored Southern Pacific section hand, resident of the railroad shacks on South 14th street, was booked by police on a disorderly conduct complaint Friday night signed by a Portland Negroess.

The woman, who identified herself as Helen Green, said she had received $50 from Booker Robinson on one of her regular visits to the section crew quarters.

Later, she claimed, Robinson became angered, took her purse, the $50 and $15 more. When he beat her, she called police.

Added to her story was an account to the effect that Robinson was wanted in Texas for murder. Robinson told police he had killed a man there, but had been released by a trial.

A 22 caliber rifle was found in Robinson's shack along with ammunition for a 45 pistol and a shotgun.

Robinson was held in lieu of $200 on the disorderly charge while authorities investigated the possibility he is wanted in Texas.

Eisenhower

There were suggestions — not denied in Washington — that in global strategy the Pacific zone might again assume the position it had in World War II, when the enemy there was merely held at bay until victory in Europe was assured.

This concept, highly unpopular with Gen. Douglas MacArthur when he was supreme allied commander in the Pacific during the war, is expected to be equally unsatisfactory to him now.
