On Murder's Skirts

By TERRY ADLER

"Asleep? Who, Hubbard?"

"Yes. He always used to take a nap between two and four every afternoon. I told you that Dr. Bray used to do all the real work around the department. Well, anyway, Eddie made so much noise in putting the fire out that Hubbard woke up, and, as you can imagine, was in a very nasty mood. Especially since Eddie had gotten the big hose to put out that little fire. He managed to get everything in that corner soaking wet—all the books, the desk, the floor—everything. Of course I didn't blame the chief for being mad over that."

"What did Hubbard do?"

"He bawled Eddie out and then he turned and bawled out everyone who had come to see what the racket was about. And unfortunately Bill Griffith was there, so to punish him Hubbard decided to have the exam immediately. And Bill flunked. Fenton told me afterward that Hubbard was in such a vile humor that even Darwin himself would have flunked that exam. And so of course Hubbard left word that I should notify Bill that he was fired. That means he can't get his degree. No degree—no job. Oh, the chief was a pleasant character, all right." She was silent for a few minutes, and then:

"There was some talk that Eddie purposely made all that racket to get Hubbard in a nasty mood, because Eddie and Bill didn't get along any too well. But even so, it was childish and mean for Hubbard to use Bill as a scapegoat."

"I meant to ask you about Worden," said Raff. "What sort of person is he?"

"Well, Eddie can be pretty obnoxious when he wants to. And he doesn't get along any too well with people, at least not around here. He takes offense at imaginary insults and then carries a chip on his shoulder and tries to get back at them.

"Sounds as if you don't care much for him."

"Oh, he's all right, really. And at times he's very accommodating. But sometimes he's kind of sneaky, and that does make me mad. He wanted to shift the desks in his office. Eddie shares the office with Paul Russell—he's another graduate student. And Paul objected to this. So what does Eddie do? He makes an appointment with Paul to go skating the other afternoon with two girls, and then he doesn't show up. Instead, while Paul was at the rink, Eddie shifted the furniture and got rid of some of the Esquire drawings Paul had that Eddie didn't want around. And then Eddie bragged about the fast one he'd pulled."

"I was wondering about that this morning. Doesn't it seem strange to you that Worden should walk into Bray's office to use his typewriter?"

"Heavens, that wouldn't mean anything in this department. Anybody walks into anybody else's office any time at all—except Hubbard's, that is. And the typewriter belongs to the department, so anyone can take it into his own office. Oh, I know what you're thinking, but Eddie would never have hurt Dr. Bray. He was the only one around there that Eddie really liked. He used to consult Dr. Bray and no one else about his thesis research and go to him with his troubles. No, you're really wrong there. As much as it's possible for Eddie to like anyone, he certainly liked Bray, I think, besides myself. Eddie is the only one around there who will miss Dr. Bray."

Pearl-essence, made of scales from small fish and used to fashion simulated pearls, is so much in demand that Norway has pearl-essence factories near its herring fleet base.
