

IT PAYS TO BE BALD

Light Reflected from Bald Head Saves Life of Man

Avondale, Ariz., May 5 (AP)—If he wasn't bald, Frank P. Attaway probably wouldn't be alive today. Because he was, the Phoenix blacksmith is reported recovering from numerous cuts and bruises. He was snatched from a railroad track here just before a passenger train thundered by. His rescuers who also narrowly escaped death were Avondale Police Chief Lee Shepard and Harry Rex, assistant chief.

Attaway, accompanying race horses to Portland, Ore., apparently fell from the rear car of a train here about 9 p.m. He lay across the tracks. Light reflected from his bald head drew the attention of Ann Hannah as she drove into her driveway adjacent to the railroad right-of-way.

She investigated, found Attaway, and notified police. Shepard and Rex arrived moments before another train was due. They charged up the 9-foot gravel roadbed. Shepard grabbed Attaway's belt and Rex his left arm and shoulder.

"The locomotive looked as if it was already on top of us," the chief said. "We could feel the heat of it." The policemen and the man they'd rescued slid down the bank as the train pounded by. "I was sure the wheels had cut off his feet," Shepard said. "It was that close."
