Pioneer Still Stands Straight

The Pioneer atop Oregon's State house is standing straight, and still gazing with a placid yearning towards the far horizon.

He never has been disturbed by gale or earthquake, and is as solid on his footing as if he were bolted down.

That is what two investigators found by personal inspection Monday after they had heard alarm expressed that the Pioneer had been shaken out of equilibrium by the earthquake of a few weeks ago.

R. A. Case, Portland engineer, and Laurence Christensen, superintendent of state buildings, ascended to the State house roof to see. The found well and undisturbed.

Daylight Saving Effective Here Next Monday Morning

Daylight saving will be effective in Salem next Monday morning, starting at 12:01 o'clock a.m. The city will go back to standard time next September 11 at 1:59 a.m.

The daylight saving ordinance was enacted by the city council Monday night after a long hearing that was accorded the large audience. The bill was advanced on the agenda when it was apparent that it would not be reached until midnight if it kept its regular place on the calendar.

Numerous petitions were filed against it, but most of them from outside the city. They came from Marion, Mt. Angel, Woodburn, Silverton and other places, and from the Salem Trades and Labor council, the Grange and the Farmers' union.

Alderman Albert H. Gille, who sponsored the bill, said Marion county had 25,000 employees who wanted daylight saving, including 15,000 in the school systems and 4000 employed by the state.

Alderman David O'Hara said he doubted if a majority of the state employees wanted it. Only O'Hara and Armstrong voted against the ordinance.

In reply to Gille's mention of salaried persons who wanted the bill a speaker in the audience said "They are paid by taxation and the farmers pay the taxes."

Blood Day Is Second Tuesday

The second Tuesday of every month is the date for the visitation of the bloodmobile from the Portland regional blood center at Salem, it was announced at the meeting of the board of directors of Marion county chapter, American Red Cross, Monday evening.

The bloodmobile was here through Tuesday. To supply the needs for Marion county the mobile unit will have to visit Salem not only once a month but will have to schedule six trips in other sections of the county through the year.

Other reports at the meeting of the board last evening showed 13 persons certified in the recent first aid class for instructors; that 20 nurses' aides are now signed up to assist with the blood program, as well as several staff assistants, canteen workers and motor service drivers.

Total case load for the month in the home service department was listed at 177, many of the total being cases for assistance in making out claims and consultation for veterans and their families. A total of $925.86 was given out in grants and loans, mainly to disabled veterans and their families.

5 Police Cars Chase O'Bryan

A grade on the Mission Bottom road about ten miles north of Salem succeeded in halting Donovan H. O'Bryan, of 1548 Mission street, after five police cars had been unable to bring him to a stop in a chase which began in Salem.

O'Bryan was taken to county jail under charges of larceny and reckless driving and scheduled for arraignment in district court.

State police spotted the truck which O'Bryan was accused of stealing from Orval Shryder because it was running without clearance lights. When he refused to halt the big tractor, semi-trailer, the chase began.

The state officers called for city aid, and eventually five cars began trailing the big truck as it headed north. There were three city cars and two state police cars. Each attempt to pass the truck was stopped by O'Bryan who swerved the tractor, causing the big truck behind to whip over the highway and block out the police.

Spotlights were played on the truck's rear view mirrors to blind the driver, but he continued until he missed shifting gears on a grade. Forced to stop, the police nabbed him.

Police presumed the driver of the truck was drunk, and it was not until after O'Bryan was placed under arrest that they learned the truck was stolen.

Find Old Fuel Tank in Tunnel

An old fuel oil tank, of several thousand gallons capacity was unexpectedly uncovered Tuesday by workmen excavating for the tunnel between the new State Office building and the State House.

And they think there is another big tank underneath it. The tank dates back to the old State House days and recalls installation of a heating system when Oswald West was governor of Oregon. The heating plant was first a wood burner, and then oil equipment was installed. It was used until the present heating plant on South 12th street was built.

That the location of the tank had been forgotten may be accounted for by the fact that the blueprints of the plant were burned when the old capitol burned in 1935.

How much oil is in the tank may be known Tuesday afternoon when, it was thought, the tank would be opened.
