Chapter 10

He drove into the ramp, packed his car and helped Felicity out. He then turned to Tippy, who was scrambling out, a wary eye upon Garrett's stern face.

"Tippy," he said in an ostentatiously gentle voice as she would have spied past him. "I'd like a word with you, my girl."

Felicity whirled and her startled eyes met his.

Felicity looked down at the small set face; if there had been one plain, tiny hint for sympathy, one plea for rescue in Tippy's face, one scared look in her wide, dark eyes Felicity would have broken and fought Garrett for her. But the very hardness in that small face set of that rosy mouth that was just a thin, pink line, warned Felicity that for Tippy's own good Tippy had to be punished.

Felicity drew long, hard breaths, touched Tippy's shining curls with a fleeting caress and fled.

Tippy watched her go, and then Tippy lifted her face to Garrett's and said through clenched teeth, "You can spank the livin' daylights out of me, but I won't cry! You can't make me cry!"

She met his eyes steadily, without a hint of breaking. Her mouth was stubborn line; her eyes were sulky, daring him; challenging his authority; yet admitting herself too small and weak to avoid his physical violence. And suddenly Garrett was conscious of being very much ashamed.

Meeting her stormy gaze, he knew the exact moment when Tippy realized that he was no longer blindly furious, and suddenly he was a little ashamed of his desire for physical violence.

The derisive gleam in her eye that faint tugging of a smile at the corners of her mouth, stiffened his determination and quickened again his anger. He turned, swung open the door of his trailer, and said sternly, "Inside, youngster—and make it snappy."

Garrett stared down at her and then he thrust one hand in his pocket, the other through his tousled blonde locks and strode a pace or two away from her before he turned, dropped down on the couch, and said sternly, "Of course you know, Tippy, that you deserve a sound licking—don't you?"

"Then why don't you get started?" demanded Tippy boldly.

Garrett's face darkened and his hands reached out and jerked her by his knee. But the smallness and weakness of her body between his strong hands struck at him like a physical blow. "Hang it all, Tippy—I can't lick you!" he admitted in defeat indignantly.

Tippy leaned confidently against him, her eyes quite sober. "I know I had no business bringing the baby back, but—well, they were so near about not letting us play on their old beach."

Garrett stared at her in dawning horror.

"Then you stole the baby deliberately?" he demanded.

Tippy nodded, an English smile lighting at the corners of her mouth. "To get even with that fat old man who called us ragamuffins and made us leave their beach," she acknowledged frankly.

"But, Tippy— that's terrible —" Garrett wailed, all but speechless.

She nodded soberly. "I know it was, and I'm sorry—now, I go down to be punished, don't I?"

"You do, indeed, Tippy, my lup," said Garrett grimly. "But much as I know you deserve it, I—well, I can't do it."

Tippy hesitated and then her better nature for a moment overrode the impishness of her and she uttered shyly, "Well, I'd hate it like the dickens if my hair wasn't curly, and if I had to wear shorts all the time and couldn't ever dress up and have people say, 'Why, what
