Noble Opposes Columbia CVA

Dan Noble, secretary-manager of the Northwest Development association, spoke in opposition to the proposed Columbia Valley Authority Wednesday before members of the Salem Exchange club.

The primary target of Noble's remarks was that the bills submitted to congress by administration forces concentrated too much authority in the hands of a three-man board which would be appointed by and "under the thumb" of the president.

He claimed that even some socialists opposed the CVA on the grounds that it failed to provide proper democratic controls. Noble urged that the northwestern be developed under the powers of existing agencies in an orderly fashion which would keep alive the principles of free enterprise.

He compared the proposed CVA and the TVA to detail the fact that the Bonneville-Grand Coulee tieup produces more power at less cost than that produced in the entire 28 dam project of the TVA.

Although the law which established TVA and the proposed bills on the CVA are almost identical, Noble explained that the Tennessee area was a sixth of the size of the northwest, that its economic and agricultural needs were completely different and that a "20-day cut of timber in Oregon would clean out the TVA area forests."

Voice Demanded

The Oregon senator offered five amendments to a bill written by the senate armed services committee to revise the 1947 unification act.

Under another Morse amendment, the secretaries of army, navy and air force would be called "undersecretaries of defense."
Other changes proposed by the Oregon senator would strengthen the position of the proposed chairman of the joint chiefs of staff; give the joint chiefs a larger staff of helpers; and increase the authority of the munitions board.
