

Newton Davis' Cow In Record Production

Eagle Dolly Fawn, a registered Jersey cow owned by Newton Davis, Woodburn, has completed a production record of 8,766 pounds of milk and 461 pounds butterfat which has qualified her for the silver medal award. The American Jersey Cattle club, with headquarters in Columbus, O. Eagle Dolly Fawn's record was made on 305-day actual production at the age of 2 years and 4 months. All her tests were verified by both Oregon State college and The American Jersey Cattle club. In compiling this record she produced more than two times as much butterfat as the average dairy cow in the United States.

Farmers Hear Words Defined

News stories about "acreage allotments" and "marketing quotas" in connection with rapidly increasing stocks of farm commodities have prompted E. Harvey Miller, chairman of the state production and marketing administration committee, to try to clear up some apparent confusion in the use of the terms.

"In view of the possibility that these farm-program provisions may once more be called on to prevent disrupted market conditions," Miller said, "farmers and others ought to be sure that they understand what is meant by 'allotments' and 'quotas.'"

"During the war, these parts of the national farm program were not used, so that confusion in the use of the two terms is not surprising. There is a very definite difference in meaning, however. The two words are not interchangeable." An "acreage allotment," Miller explains, means that acreage which is required to grow a crop of the size needed. A national allotment is set by the secretary of agriculture and then broken down by states, counties, and farms. A farmer may comply or not with his farm allotment, but if he does not he is not entitled to receive government price support on his crop.

A "marketing quota" for a basic crop, on the other hand, represents that supply necessary to meet all market demands for that crop and insure a safe carryover. The national quota is divided among states, counties, and farms by means of acreage allotments. A farm's quota usually the entire production from that farm's acreage allotment — represents that farm's share of the national market for the particular crop. Marketing in excess of the farm quota are subject to a penalty.

Queuille Thinking About Resigning

Paris, May 26 (AP)—A friend of Premier Henri Queuille told a reporter today that the head of the French government was "thinking" of resigning. The friend said that the premier had telephoned President Vincent Auril and told him he was considering resigning because of the attitude taken in some quarters towards his government. Queuille's cabinet has been under fire for several weeks because of a deficit of 83,000,000,000 francs ($250,000,000) in the budget.

Mothers Served Tea

Aurora—Members of the three 4-H cooking clubs entertained their mothers and teachers with a tea. The clubs were led by Mrs. Ed Holmquist, Mrs. Roy Hough and Mrs. Guy Shields. The girls entertained with several musical numbers and Mrs. Elmer Klein gave a short talk on "Parent Co-operation in 4-H."
