Wiss Gubser Home

That's easy. Get a big posse and go up there and call for a show-down."

Jeff nodded. "That was my first thought, but there are several objections to such a course. In the first place, it would mean that somebody on both sides would get hurt, maybe killed. In the second place, the responsibility for that attack would be with me, and if that certain rancher pointed out that he didn't own these parks, that they were open to anybody who wanted to graze cattle there, that the brands on the cattle had not been worked over, I'd be in a tough spot and the town of Cougar, as my employer, might be open to suit for damages."

Chuck's grin broadened. "You don't say! Never thought of that."

Jeff was quite sure that he had thought of it. "You don't need any advice from me. You know that you ain't got a case against this rancher. He ain't rustlin' or handlin'rustled stock, for as long as the brands ain't changed he can't sell that stock. And if he can't sell them. The might use them to breast. Expected if they were "Rought if they were they are they were "Rought if they were "Rought if they were they are they were they are they a that stock. And if he can't sell tem, what'd be the use of havin them?"

"Well, he might use them to breed. Expecially if they were particularly good stock. Calves, you know, are born without brands or earmarks. As soon as they were weaned he could slap his own brand on them and throw them in with his own stuff and hobody'd know the difference." He eyed Chuck steadily. "Now if I had happened up there at calving time and found a calf with a Crown cow, and later I found that cow without the calf, I might have pomething to go on. Or if one of those calves happened to find its way back to the mother and was running around with her bearing this rancher's brand, there'd be a good excuse for starting somethin."

CAREFUL

(Chapter 19)

Remembering that it was part of his duties as outlined by Jeb King to keep the squatters under observation, he spent the rest of that week scouting the south edge of the valley.

He traced trails out and found that, peculiarly or not, as one wished to regard it, they invariably led to some other ravine or gully significantly close to Chuck Gale's ranch.

This time he found one of those hidden parks and in it he found quite a number of cattle. Painstakingly he rode about, examining brands; and finally he cut out a cow which wore the Crown brand of Jeb King. Just one, but that was enough. She was being used, he judged, for breeding, He didn't was enough. She was being used, he judged, for breeding, He didn't was enough.
