

Camp Adair Damage Action Brought to Final Approval

Dallas, June 30—Judge C. F. (Jack) Hayes of Polk county states that the county court had agreed to a settlement of damages done to Camp Adair area roads by the army at $104,060. This offer was made to the county sometime ago by the judge advocate general of the army, but the county court appealed the matter on the grounds that the sum allowed did not cover two market roads in the area and was insufficient to cover damage done. They asked for $150,000.

However, a letter from Col. H. C. Chuck of the office of the assistant secretary of the army, informed the court this week that action of the chief of the claims and litigation division of the army in setting the $104,060 figure had been upheld.

A wire from Senator Guy Cordon which arrived shortly after the letter advised the court that it would be necessary to make settlement at once in order that the sum be included in this year's deficiency bill before the adjournment of congress on July 25.

Consultation with a local attorney confirmed the fact that further pressing the claim would be useless at this time.

The army spokesman pointed out that $469,000 had been spent by the federal government on substitute secondary highways in the area. (Judge Hayes declared that the new roads do not serve all the territory as those for which no damages were allowed.)

Col. Chuck stated further that the state had quit-claimed the two roads over which the issue arose to the federal government during the war. Since they were the property of the federal government at that time, the army had no obligation to maintain them, he said. The roads are now being maintained by the county.

Judge Hayes states that all the money to be received will be used on the Adair roads and

Spring Frosts Injure Plantings

Spring frosts that weakened new canes in some Thornless Evergreen blackberry plantings may result in a short crop in 1950 if corrective measures are not taken soon, believes County Extension Agent D. L. Rasmussen. He recommends cutting out severely frosted canes or cutting back to a strong side arm below the frosted area.

First report of frost injury to that a separate fund will be set up apart from the county budget for the administration of the proceeds.

Thornless Evergreens was made to Rasmussen by A. B. Weisner of the North Howell district early in May. Some of Weisner's new canes had shrunk at the tips because of frost injury. They were twisted and deformed. Cut surfaces shows blackened water-soaked tissue in the pithy part of the cane.

Last week an examination of the Lawrence Paradis planting south of Woodburn was made by Dr. E. K. Vaughan, plant pathologist at Oregon State college, and Rasmussen. The Paradis planting showed winter injury to part of the new canes in the lower part of the field. However, the injured canes also showed new growth beyond the frosted areas.

Rasmussen warns growers that frosted canes are weak canes even though they may still have enough vigor to force growth past the frosted areas.

"It is better to remove frosted canes now than have them break at the weakened areas when they're trained on the wires next year. Growers will find that frost injury varies from hill to hill. Removing weakened canes will allow greater sap flow through the healthy canes left in the hill and probably result in a normal crop in 1950," Rasmussen concludes.
