Baruch Replies To President

New York, July 1 (AP) — Bernard Baruch has suggested that President Truman look in his White House files for the industrial mobilization plan which the president denied receiving.

In a ship to shore conversation with the New York Times Baruch said: "The record will justify what I said. If the president will examine the correspondence on the subject he will find that it was not I who was misinformed."

The newspaper quoted Baruch as saying the plan had been submitted to the president by Arthur M. Hill, then chairman of the national security resources board, in May or June of 1948.

Baruch told the newspaper that John R. Steelman, assistant to the president, had later advised him that the president disapproved of the plan at that time.

Baruch charged in an address last Tuesday that the president was obstructing plans for the nation's mobilization. The president denied at his news conference yesterday that the board had presented such a plan or that he had rejected it.

Boston No Hit With Salemites

Boston — known to Bostonians as the Hub or THE center of the nation — was a subject of discussion and derision Friday for members of the Salem credit association who attended the recent international retail credit association convention there.

"My impression of the theme of the week," Francis Smith, chairman of the Salem group, said, "was the one expression, 'Hot, ain't it.'"

"And lobster? They can keep it," Smith continued, "and so far as the people are concerned, all the smart fellows from Harvard must have gone to Washington or New York. You couldn't find them in Boston."

Smith also expressed his displeasure at failing to find any but "cute witches" in Salem, Mass.

His sentiments were confirmed by two other confirmed Salemites—Alta Myers and Bessie Kayser—who also attended the meeting in the bean city where they even failed to find beans.

County to Exam Old Senior High

County Judge Grant Murphy stated that he and Dr. W. J. Stone, head of the Marion county health department, plan in the near future to investigate the possibility of part of the old Salem senior high school building being available for use by the health department, even before other county offices move in there when a new courthouse is being built and abandoning the present offices in the Masonic building.

Quarters in the Masonic building are becoming cramped, he said, and with funds becoming available from the Kellogg foundation for the nurses' training program will become even more so as the program develops. Expansion in the Masonic building for additional health department use is presenting more complications and will become difficult, he said, necessitating considerable shifting of offices.

The matter came up as the county judge was submitting to the court a plan being worked out for putting into effect parking regulations around the courthouse grounds when a new law goes into effect authorizing the court to control such parking, even by penal methods if necessary. A number of spaces are assigned to the health department and he pointed out if the health department is moved to the old high school building it also will alleviate that situation. The plan as outlined for courthouse parking now would assign 25 spaces to employees and leave nine open for public use.

Washington, July 1 (AP) — The government put a new agency to work today at mass purchasing for most federal bureaus, in a move to save money.

It was suggested as an economy step in the government reorganization plan of the bipartisan commission headed by former President Herbert Hoover.

Congress finished legislation setting up the new general services administration yesterday and President Truman quickly signed the bill into law.

At its head Mr. Truman placed a former army colonel and Oklahoma lawyer, Jess Larson.

Larson has been serving as federal works administrator. But before that he was Uncle Sam's biggest merchandise salesman, disposing of billions of dollars worth of surplus government property as war assets administrator.

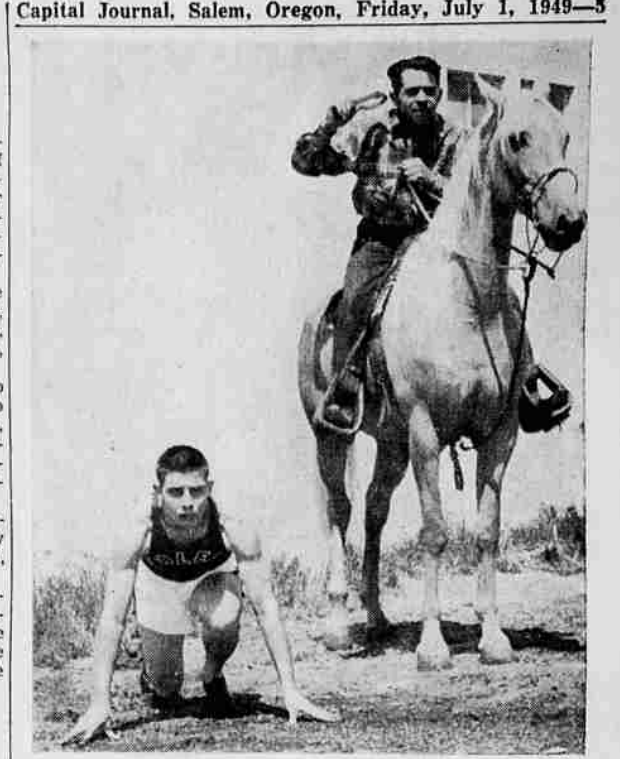

His nomination for the job of general services administrator was due to go to the senate today. His duties would be to handle property management and buying for a group of major agencies. Some government departments, like the military, will continue to do their own buying and housekeeping chores.

Among the other visiting groups participating were a group from the Mt. Angel Flax Festival and the Newberg Berries.

Judges for the parade were Donald Lutz, Lee Canfield and Mark Taylor and parade chairman was Herbert E. Barker.

Another section would increase a federal authorization of $100,000 a year to $2,500,000 for providing forest-tree seeds and plants on a matching basis.

Additional Sections
A third section would boost from $100,000 to $500,000 annually the federal contribution to states for educational programs dealing with production management programs.

Two additional sections approved by the house were stricken by the senate committee.

One would have authorized direct technical assistance to farmers and forest owners in planting, management and harvesting of timber crops with a $1,000,000 federal contribution.

The other sought to revise and consolidate previous federal forestry programs to eliminate overlapping and duplication.

The Morse bill would expand present authorizations of $17,500,000 for 1950 and 1951 for building access roads to and in national forests to $30,000,000 each year.
