

SPEEDBOAT ACCIDENT VICTIM

Girl Who Lost Her Legs Finds She Will Swim Again

Reno, July 5 (AP)—Pretty Imogene Wittsche, 13, who lost her legs when a speedboat ran over her while swimming a week ago, learned from another legless girl today that someday she will be able to swim again.

Norma Carrothers, 14, of Topeka, Kan., visited Imogene at her hospital bed as living proof that an almost-normal life is possible with artificial limbs.

Norma lost her feet two years ago in an auto accident. She cut short a vacation in Long Beach, Cal., to come here "for as long as I'm needed" to show Imogene the things she has learned to do despite her misfortune.

Imogene wasn't told until Saturday that her feet were gone. Then her parents gave her newspaper clippings telling about Norma. Imogene read and reread the clippings and then fretted for fear her hair might not look "just right" when Norma arrived.

Mrs. J. W. Carrothers, Norma's mother, said Norma herself was told she had lost her feet by a nine-year-old girl who suffered a similar accident.

Dressed in a pretty green print dress and white bobby socks Norma walked firmly into Imogene's hospital room Sunday and stood by her bed. Imogene's Sunday school teacher, the Rev. William McCalmont of Roseville, Cal., introduced them.

The two girls exchanged quiet "hellos." Then Imogene asked: "Will I be able to swim again?"

Norma said she would, and added that she often went swim-listened with tears in their eyes. Wittsche said the "biggest" problem of his life was how to tell Imogene she had lost her feet. But after Sunday's meeting, he said "I guess we face the biggest one of all, but we've made a good start."

Norma's mother said that her daughters school friends had just about forgotten the fact that her legs aren't her own.

"She does everything and she's not afraid of anything. I don't understand how she can be so happy. But she is."

They talked for a half-hour as Imogene's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Wittsche watched and

Powder, Paint Test Drivers

Gunpowder and paint will be used to show Salem automobile drivers how much time and space they need to stop their cars when driving at normal speed.

The demonstration will be on Thursday of this week and will be sponsored by the Salem Taxi Service. City officials will be invited to witness the tests. The place probably will be North Church between Marion and Union streets.

Lynn Clark of the taxi company tells how it works.

A mechanical device is attached to the front bumper of the car. In the rear seat is a man who pulls a string. That shoots a .22-calibre cartridge in the device and makes a spatter of paint on the pavement.

When the driver hears the shell explode he slams his brakes. The brakes discharge another cartridge which makes another paint spatter.

The distance between paint spots in feet show the reaction time for the driver. The distance between the second paint spot and the front tire show distance necessary to stop the car after brakes are applied.

The demonstration was used last week in Vancouver, and will go from here to Coos Bay.
