The fireworks apparently were set off, police said, by youthful hitchhikers riding in the car. (AP Wirephoto)

Exhibition of Artists at Delake to Close July 9th

The first annual exhibition of Oregon artists, including many who have exhibited in Salem, will close at Delake July 9. The display is being presented by the Lincoln County Art Center. Heading the list of exhibitors is Clyde Leon Keller, known as the dean of Oregon artists, who was born in Salem. He has paintings in every state of the union and several foreign countries and has painted for two presidents, Herbert Hoover and Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Other artists include Arthur A. Selander, born in Marshfield in December, 1884. He has held one-man shows in pencil rendering and oil paintings here, Portland and in Virginia.

The group which has been represented or held one-man shows at the Elfstrom art galleries here also includes Fay Hoffman Church, Oswego; Colista Dowling, Portland; Bob Voight, who came to Oregon in 1937 and completed his schooling in Salem, later majoring in art and education at Willamette university and now teaching art at Parrish junior high school; E. B. Quigley, known for western scenes; F. Loren Boulter, watercolorist and director for three years of the Elfstrom galleries and Albert Patecky, Portland.

Other successful artists with work on display are Mildred Warner, Ruth D. Grover, who is also an agate collector of authority and a member of the Volunteer staff of the Lincoln art center; Helen Trayle Kreps, Portland-born and instructor in portrait and life sketching at the center; Menalkas Selander, Portland; Maude Walling Wanker, who has a studio at We-

Four Found Guilty of Selling Young Veal

Portland, July 6 (AP)—District Judge Frank E. Day has found four meat dealers guilty of selling under-aged veal, but observed that the legislature had arbitrarily set the age limit at four weeks.

His ruling upheld the validity of the act, but noted that authorities had advised him veal may be mature between five and 21 days.

Meat dealers Morris Goldfoot and Warren Oster, Portland, were fined $500 each and given suspended jail sentences of 180 days. N. W. Andrews, Tigard Meat company, also was sentenced and fined $400, but both were suspended. Dealer Carl Rudeen, Portland, was dealt a $500 suspended fine.

Veal under four weeks of age is defined in the act as unfit for human consumption.

Added Pounds of Ex-Willamette Player too Much for Ballast

Keith L. Jones, former Willamette university football player and now chief of police at Eugene, is too heavy for the Goodyear blimp "Volunteer."

Jones was among Eugene city officials invited for a courtesy flight during a visit of the blimp to that city this week. But it took two tries.

The first time he was the last man in the gondola, and, when load tests showed the blimp was overloaded, he was asked to wait the next trip. He made it that time.

Jones, a lineman with the Bearcats, admits that he has gained since his college days when football programs listed him as 196 pounds.

Budworm Fight Spurred by Intensive Research Effort

Started this year with the spraying of infested forests, the battle against the spruce budworm infesting more than a million acres of Oregon's forests is to be intensified through a cooperative research project.

Authorization of the project by the state board of forestry was announced this week by George Spaur, deputy state forester, who stated that research plans would be placed in effect July 15 in an attempt to control the defoliating insect before tree damage is done.

At present the vicious tree killer can be sprayed only during a limited 10-15 day larval period and after the damage has been done.

The research project to be started this month will determine whether this spraying for the budworm can be extended from spring to mid-summer. Such a program, if effective, would increase materially the forest land acreage that could be sprayed and treated annually.

According to general estimates by local foresters this insect if allowed to go unchecked can damage more trees annually in Lane county than all forest fires in the past 10 years.

Three toxic spray solutions are to be tested for this control measure and nine test areas, 330 acres each, have been established and to be treated by solutions of DDT, toxaphene and benzene hexachloride. All sprays under test will be applied by helicopter with effectiveness of the different sprays to be determined by a study next spring of the budworm population and the degree of damage to trees after the spray treatments.

Supervisory work will be handled by John B. Woods, Jr., assistant state forester, and Dick Berry, research director. The research project is a cooperative undertaking by the state board of forestry, the Bureau of Entomology and Plant Quarantine and the U. S. forest service.
