Salem Aviation Day Will Demonstrate Skill, Safety

Not a thrill-giver with dare-devils performing in the air but a display and demonstration of what the average person can do in the aviation world if he wants to fly.

The plan for Salem's Aviation day set for Sunday, August 28, at a meeting held at McNary field Tuesday afternoon.

Displays, demonstrations and races of various kinds are to be featured, and 300 free rides in planes of local operators will be given away. Aviation day will not be all local, either, for invitations are being sent to a number of flying groups and persons from out of town prominent in aviation.

For the farmers raising crops needing dusting or spraying Leo (Ace) Demers will arrange a display in his hangar on the west side of the field, and in addition to the display he will give a demonstration of dusting with a formation of his planes.

Will Stress Safety
Safety will be stressed all through the show with demonstrations planned by the state board of aeronautics. The operation of the CAA tower here will be explained in connection, not only with safety operations on the field, but flying in general.

The Salem Naval Air Facility on the east side of the field will be open for inspection by the public and United Air Lines will have its office open for inspection. UAL also plans to have one of its four-engine planes here for exhibit and other airlines will be asked to take part in the event.
