Joseph M. Wagner, West Church street, Mt. Angel, wants Marion county to reimburse him for having to repaint his house. In a letter to the county court he says that he painted his house on Thursday, July 14. On Saturday, July 16, the county oiling crew came along and did oiling work on the street in front of his house. He says a strong northwest wind was blowing with result that the sticky oil was blown in a spray on the newly painted surface of his house and blemished it to such an extent it is necessary to do a new paint job. He says he was unaware of the fact the road was to be oiled, that no notice was given him and under the circumstances he thinks he should be reimbursed at least $150 for the incident. County court members are taking the matter under consideration. They say that the crew was probably doing the work inside the city limits at the request of the Mt. Angel city officials and if so doubt whether the county would be liable. They also doubt whether the county would be liable even if the work was outside of the city and being done at the instance of the county.

Democracies Must Push Ahead, Says Dr. Benes

By ROBERT LETTS JONES
Western democracies, led by the United States, must keep advancing in the cold war, Dr. Bohus Benes, nephew of the late president of Czechoslovakia, warned a Salem audience Wednesday night.

In the second of a series of local lectures, the visiting professor at Willamette university, predicted Russia would retreat in the face of such advances. He pointed to the fear in the Kremlin that the communist party would be destroyed "from within" by the military if war came, as "Hitler almost was twice."

Dr. Benes cited the treaty of Brest-Litovsk as an example of how top bolsheviks would retreat and come to terms in order to keep control. The treaty of Brest-Litovsk was signed in early 1918 by the bolsheviks with Kaiser Wilhelm's government and his allies. By the treaty, the Russians gave up one-fourth of their country, Dr. Benes said.

It was his belief that diplomatic advances by the western democracies could be made without necessarily bringing on a third world war. A start toward pushing the Russians back in the cold war was made with the Marshall plan. Then there was the Berlin airlift.

"You have added the Atlantic pact," he reminded his listeners who almost filled Waller hall on the university campus. He foresaw similar pacts in the Pacific and Mediterranean regions.

He quickly cautioned the audience that he would not rule out the possibility of another war. "The Czech people pray for war, but they understand that three world wars in one century might destroy humanity. They are patient. They know they will be liberated."

In answer to a question from the floor, Dr. Benes dashed any hope that people behind the Iron Curtain might overthrow the police regime without outside help. "You, the people of the United States, will have to help—one day or another. When we have arms and help, we will do the rest."

The decision of man today is one between God and comdecide to be either a Christian munism, he said. "Man must or a communist."

Bohus Benes' uncle, Dr. Edward Benes, was not so optimistic about avoiding World War III, he said. The late president of Czechoslovakia predicted that "if Stalin does not go back behind his frontiers, a third World War is inevitable. Stalin's greediness will destroy him."

The visiting professor at Willamette was outspoken on the effect of Russian domination of his country in the past few years. "If Czechoslovakia has to be sacrificed again, let it be a warning to those that co-operation is not possible with gangsters."

Dr. Benes traced the effect of Russian relations on Czechoslovakia. He told how his uncle had tried to bridge the gap between the east and west with a "humanitarian democracy." This was a mildly socialized form of government, he explained, and was accepted by the western democracies and by the Soviets. "But Moscow had other ideas," he added.

When the Czechs wanted to participate in the Marshall plan, "an order came immediately from Moscow to refuse help we had already accepted. Moscow branded the Marshall plan as democratic camouflage for imperialistic aggression."

Then came the Red terror to Czechoslovakia. The Czech army had been disarmed, he said. According to a military alliance with Russia, the Czechs were not permitted to build up the army with their own weapons. The army had to use Russian weapons.

Dr. Benes accused the Russians of murdering Jan Masaryk, Czech leader and son of his country's first president. "Jan Masaryk died in a horrible way. He was shot three times and then thrown out of a window." Communists said he had committed suicide.

Benes said he believed, also, that his uncle, Edward Benes, was murdered last year by the communists.

Bohus Benes will give his third and final lecture in Waller hall on August 3.
