Bob Drilling, Senator start-

Bob Drilling, Senator starting pitcher, served four innings before giving way to Bill Osborn and when the latter proved ineffective, Bob Hedington came in from his third base position. He work the last two frames giving up six hits and two runs. Six Salem errors cut the earned mark down to four.

Luck played a small part in the Senators' lack of scoring, although absence of horse shoes was not responsible for the beating they absorbed. For instance, in the fourth, Bob Cherry hit the very top of the center field screen but when the ball bounced back he was held to a single by some fast fielding. Then Mel Wasley hit the left center field screen with a screaming liner and the ball stuck there. Instead of getting a home run, ground rules made it a double.

Lockwood Retained

Retention of Charlie A. Lockwood by the recently appointed tate game commission doubtless will please most nimrods, although the appointment has been earmarked "temporary." Lockwood, one of the hardest workers the game department has ever had, has been informed he is to remain as state game commissioner for the balance of the year. In the meantime they will observe his work and then review the situation. Lockwood's hands were more or less tied under the old commission and he did pretty much as ordered remarkless of his coun views on any Stars Break Slump at did pretty much as ordered regardless of his own views on any certain problem. He probably knows Oregon better than any other person who has been engaged in public work and has been a tireless worker in the interest of game as well as the man who buys a license.
