

Tragedy Befalls Family—The Entriken family lines up in Portland Ore., to have its picture taken after the group hadn't eaten for two days because they were without funds after Mr. Entriken left for California in search of a job and was stranded in Eugene, Ore., after his car broke down. Further tragedy came to the already hapless family when Nancy, 13 (right, rear row), went swimming in the Columbia river and drowned the day after this picture was taken. (Acme Telephone photo.)

Albany Field Grain Fire Most Serious for Season

Albany, Ore., Aug. 2—One of the worst field fires of the season burned more than 60 acres of rye grass on the Joel Ropp property south of Albany at the end of Marion street, according to Fire Chief Don Hayne.

Ropp claimed partial damage to 25 sacks of rye grass seed that were lying in the field ready to be hauled away. However, Burlington-Meeker Seed company, handling the grain reported that only 138 sacks of approximately 350 in the field were hauled out before the fire swept over the grain.

Chief Hayne also estimated that there were approximately 150 sacks of grain in the field. Ropp said that most of the burned-over grain could be salvaged. The loss was not covered by insurance.

Four trucks from the Albany fire department answered the alarm as a brisk south wind spread the blaze through three 25-acre fields. The fire jumped two roads, but damage other than to the sacked grain was limited to fence rows and cut fields, Hayne reported.

Hayne gave the department's radio system major credit for keeping the Ropp blaze and an other fire southeast of town from doing serious damage.

Both fires were burning at the same time, and Hayne said that if the radio system hadn't been available to direct the firemen to points where they would be most effective one of the fires would have caused serious damage.

The other fire started on the Leslie Cade property on Route 1, near the Price school, in a field that was being threshed by combine. Before any damage was done, the blaze jumped to the Barrett estate, now being farmed by Milton Zehr.

More than 1400 sacks of rye grass seed were lying in the fire's path in one of Zehr's fields, but the fire was brought under control by Albany firemen before it reached the sacked grain. The grain was valued at more than $12,000. Two trucks answered the alarm.

Commodity Credit Sells Flax Locally

Washington, Aug. 2 (AP)—The agriculture department announced Monday sale of about 57,583 pounds of flax fiber to the Salem linen mills of Salem, Ore.

The flax fiber had been acquired by the department under a price support program. The department's remaining stocks total about 178,000 pounds.

At the office of Salem Linen mills it was said Tuesday that the purchase of 57,583 pounds of flax fiber was Oregon flax on which the commodity credit corporation made advances several years ago, later took over and is now selling to the local mills. Similar purchases have been made before.

Seed Producers Revise Estimates

Portland, Aug. 2 (AP)—Seed producers today revised rye-grass seed crop predictions for Oregon upward by ten million pounds.

A survey indicated a harvest of more than 40,000,000 pounds. This compares with an earlier prediction of 30,000,000 pounds and last year's total harvest of 27,000,000 pounds.

Linn county growers, who produce much of the crop, credited favorable weather plus extensive use of chemical fertilizer and weed killers. They said the application of the weed and fertilizer chemicals helped the crop recover from a hard winter.

Market sources said producer prices were 9 1/2 to 9 cents a pound.
