"Tve found another place to live." Priscilla said simply. "I'd only bother you if I stayed here." To her surprise her mother's face went livid.

"You're doing this to shame me." cried Mrs. Hayden. "You want the neighbors to say I put you outright after your father died. And after I was nice enough to let you come here, Little as I think of your husband, I know he wouldn't have treated you like that unless you deserved it. There must have been another man. "Shaking with revulsion, Priscilla went upstairs to get her things. Little Drussie was waiting for her eyes brimming with tears. In a second, the two sisters were in each other's arms.

"May I come to see you, Pris?" faltered Drusie, through her sobs.
