Chapter 23

Somewhere on the outskirts of town a heavy truck surmounted by a huge crane was busily engaged in lifting an automobile from the depths of a river. The operation was being performed under the direction of the police.

A second patrol car had driven up, its three occupants joining the one on the scene.

After some fifteen minutes, broken only by the grinding of gears as the crane began to roll in the purge. They'll probably known more after they get through examining the town of chain, and the occasional hoarse shouts from below, the body of a middle-aged green car rose from the surface of the water. Higher and higher it swung streams of water cascading from it. The tow truck trundled it forward over the uneven ground as the slack was taken up.

"It sure beats all how he got this far from the highway," one of the troopers said as he moved the troopers said as he moved the deannylie climbed up from below.

had meanwhile climbed up from below.

The one who had been in the water to fasten the chain about the submerged car shivered.

"If you guys don't mind, I'll take one of the cars and get back to town. It's cold." After he had gone, the trooper who had started to investigate the car pulled open the door.

An exclamation brought the others.
"Say, look at this, will you?"
He heid up a set of Chio plates.
"Boys, it looks like we've got a hot car on our hands. I'll bet if we check the list we'll find this one on it. Wait till I just take a look-see."
He hurried toward the highway hurried toward the highway

He hurried toward the highway patrol car.

"Looks like my guess was right," he said as he came back. "This car was reported stolen about a week ago over in Jersey. This looks like professional work. They've even changed the paint job. It was listed as tan."

"You know, the way the car got in here's darned funny," one of the others declared. "Did you get a statement from anyone who saw it?"

"No. First thing we heard some-

"No. First thing we heard some-thing was wrong was when the motorcycle patrol reported that they thought a car had gone off the road, and would we take a look"

There's certainly no sign of a collision," one of the men agreed. Anything that could have struck this car with enough force to send atmaged pretty badly itself. Just the same, we'll sak around the garages to see if anyone's come in to have some collision work done. This job is banged up a bit, but not more so that you would expect after it was bounced off the rocks. Bill did that in diving for the body, The door was wedged, and that was cisco 3. Calif.
