Power Construction Work Well Under Way at Dallas

Dallas—A $60,000 construction program by the Mountain States Power company in Dallas, including the building of three substations with a capacity of 7,000 KVA, is now well underway, according to R. G. McFarland, manager for the Dallas district. The program is designed to eliminate service breakdowns, which have especially plagued the city this summer, and remedy other poor power conditions.

Two of the sub-stations will be located near the Wilamette Valley Lumber Company mill where the 66,000-volt high line comes in from the east. One will replace the sub-station that burned this summer and shut off power over the city for several hours. The old station was repaired temporarily and has been in use since in that condition. The new sub-station will be constructed with metal girders to lessen the fire danger. A second sub-station at the mill will be the terminus for the 66,000-volt line, will tie-in with the third new sub-station located at the east end of Oak street, and will serve Falls City.

The Oak street station is nearing completion and concrete foundations have been laid for the other two.

Under the new setup, which will have the three points serving the area rather than one central plant, more flexibility will be provided. Thus if an emergency condition necessitates shutting off one section, such as the Falls City line, the rest of the area may be served without interruption. This was virtually impossible under the old arrangement.

Heavy copper is being strung from the Oak street station to downtown Dallas, thus voltage will be more stabilized and will not fluctuate with the increase and decrease in load. What are known as "110-volt circuits" will be maintained at near 120-volts.

The entire program is expected to be finished within two months. Until that time comes there is some danger of other power shutdowns due to temporary installations setup after the summer's major breakdowns. Most recent was due to the 66,000-volt highline shorting across a dirty insulator and burning a main pole. All feeder circuits were tangled together and a four-hour shutdown over the entire area resulted. The pole was spliced temporarily and now continues to serve the area.

Other insulators coated with an accumulation of dust and grime over the years will be replaced in the new program and the substations will be farther away from the industrial plant which may have contributed to the condition.

Airport to Be Free of Stench

Persons operating from or using McNary field will no longer have to worry about the stench from cannery left-overs in the field west of the airport. That was the information given the Capital Journal Thursday afternoon by I. G. (Bud) Lerman, county sanitarian.

Lerman designated to contact those responsible for dumping the refuse on the field said he felt the matter would be adequately taken care of to prevent further annoyance to operators at the airport.

Cattle being fed refuse in the field to the west of the airport are to be moved to another spot, Lerman said Thursday. Also, the cannery left-overs, instead of being dumped in excess, will be limited to the amount that can be consumed by the cattle in one day.

The sanitarian pointed out that it was not his intention to infringe on the right of an individual to feed his cattle, but that he was requesting cooperation in ridding the area of the stench and the fly nuisance.

In addition to reducing the amount of cannery left-overs fed the cattle daily, arrangements will also be made to dispose of that refuse not eaten each day by the cattle.

In event of the return of warm weather, Lerman has suggested the area where previous refuse has been dumped be sprayed to prevent the hatching of more flies.

He stated he also planned to check that area where McNary field operators said bones from the nearby slaughter houses had fallen from vehicles carrying them away from the slaughter houses.
