Big Business

Like the historic game of baseball, professional football is rapidly becoming a big business enterprise. A glance through the press guide distributed by the Los Angeles Dons, members of the all-America conference, leaves little doubt that the box office receipts must need be considerable to pay the expenses. Of course the club has an angel in the person of Don Ameche who holds the position of president. Nevertheless a sponsor, no matter how well lined his pockets may be, naturally would prefer that his business venture pays off.

Here's The Staff

In addition to Ameche, the Dons staff includes: Benjamin F. Lindheiner, chairman of the board; Harry M. Thayer, general manager; James M. Phelan, head coach; Marty Kor-dick, line coach; Earl "Dutch" Clark, backfield coach; Jim Austin, end coach; Tony DeLillis, chief player scout; Byron Bird, trainer; Harvey "Chief" West, equipment manager; Ted Bentley, publicity director; Leonard Cummings, assistant; Bentley, publicity director; Leonard Cummings, assistant; Jack Boyd, Radio-TV publicity; Al Wesson, publicity con-sultant; Jack Drees, promotion director; Nye Williams, pub-lie relations director; Gil Haynes, traveling secretary; Jack Savage, ticket manager; Charlie Chaplin, advertising direc-tor; Mary Duff, Alyce Brooks, Lucyle Strode, Edith Lab-inger, members of the office staff; Herb Wilkins, orchestra director. And of course there are the players—34 of them— who don't play for the glory of good old alma mater. Among the latter is Dick Wilkins, Woho gained fame at Ore-gon as a receiver for Van Brocklin. Long distance trips to New York, Cleveland, Buffalo, Chicago and Baltimore are not made on the narty's collective thumbs either.

Ball Park Plans

ç.

Shortly after September 22, the Portland Beaver management schort y alter September 22, the Portiano Beaver management is expected to reach a decision as to its proposed ball park on 82nd street. On that date eight construction firms that have acquired plans for the plant from the architect will submit their bids. The figures the low bidder tacks onto the bid sheet will no doubt determine whether Portland will go ahead with the pro-ject... Plans call for a reinforced concrete stadium designed to hold 18,000 persons originally, and a three-story office building designed as a part of the entrance. Ramps will be used instead of stairways and there will be only six columns in the entire strucfure. The drainage system will be copied after the one now used in Multnomah stadium and the scoreboard will be electrically operated. When and if constructed, the new park will be many minutes closer to Salem than the Vaughn Street park, for it will eliminate the necessity of threading through Portland's narro streets.

Another Building Project

Of interest to any number of persons is the announcement by Leo Harris, University of Oregon athletic director, that plans for a new steel and concrete section of the Hayward field stands have been drawn. The addition which would re-place the wooden stands now in use along the east side of the field, would increase the scaling capacity by 3500 and would bring the total to the 26,500 mark. The old grandstand will be shifted to the north end of the field, replacing the unsatisfactory horseshoe arrangement there. One needs a periscope for the first few rows there if the spectator is to get anything at all for his money. With the building of the new addition, 64 per cent of the seats will be on the sidelines.

Field Adjustments

No adjustments will be necessary in the lights at Waters park in making the change over from baseball to football, reports George Emigh, business manager of the Senators. In fact there is little to be done except marking the field and setting up the goalposts. Even the pitcher's mound will not interfere with play since the southern boundary of the gridiron will be north of that highly important physical article. While no doubt many plays will terminate in the skinned portion of the diamond, none will originate since the turfless area is all inside the 18 yard sideline zone.
