December 3 Test Date for Navy-Marine Officer Plan

December 3 has been set as the date this year for the annual competitive tests to select approximately 2,000 applicants for the Naval Reserve Officers Training corps college program. Final date for filing the applications, however, is November 12. Eligible to take the examination, which will be given in 550 cities in the United States and its territories, are all male high school seniors and graduates between the ages of 17 and 21.

In addition to the age limits the applicants must meet physical and mental standards and successfully pass an aptitude test. Blanks and information concerning the program are available from all high school principals, college deans, professors of naval science, officers of naval officer procurement and naval recruiting stations. In Oregon there is a professor of naval science at Oregon State college.

Those applicants receiving satisfactory marks in the aptitude test will be interviewed and given physical examinations at a later date. State selection committees will review their cases to select the most outstanding all-around candidates.

Under the program the young men will receive a full four-year, government-sponsored, college education at one of the 52 colleges and universities throughout the country where there are Naval Reserve Officer Training program units. The navy department bears the expense of tuition, books and normal fees required by the college in addition to providing the student with $50 per month living allowance.

On completion of his college education the student accepts a commission in the regular navy or marine corps. After two years of active duty he may elect to transfer to the appropriate reserve corps and return to civilian life or he may request retention in the regular service.

Prisoners Help Save Institution

Boston, Oct. 7 —Two hundred prisoners were acclaimed today for a heroic assist in extinguishing a $100,000 three-hour fire that wrecked the Deer Island house of correction administration building.

The fierce flames wiped out the institution's major industries. Not a single prisoner attempted to escape. No one was injured.

Two hundred of the institution's 675 prisoners were released to help fight the flames on orders of Penal Commissioner Maxwell B. Grossman.

"I'm proud of them," he said in his commendation. "They did a splendid job."

The prisoners formed a human chain, along with prison officials, to remove furniture, valuable pieces of equipment, office files and prison records from the burning structure.

Included in the files were the inmates' own records. They also carried arms and ammunition from the burning building.

Prisoners in solitary confinement on the first floor of the three-story brick structure moved to another building, without a sign of disorder, shortly after the fire was discovered.

The cause was not determined.

The "gun" in a television tube shoots no bullets, but rather "fires" a stream of electrons upon a self-contained screen.
