United Arms Board Sought

Salem's Military manpower committee at a meeting Tuesday took the initiative in proposing the formation of a combined armed services committee in the state to serve in an advisory capacity to Oregon's governor. Under the proposal made by the Salem group and forwarded to Governor McKay for approval, the combined armed services committee with the governor would function when the combined armed forces planned exhibits or any coordinated activity in the state.

During the meeting a sub-committee, composed of William Baillie, Col. Mark Hillary, Col. Philip Allison, Judge Rex Kimmel and Dave Hoss, was appointed to contact the governor and work with him in carrying out the plans for formation of the committee.

Approved at the meeting of the committee was the formal report made by Col. Mark Hillary, who headed the sub-committee of the Salem Military Manpower committee in planning the combined armed forces exhibit for the state fair, and the report of Col. Henry Russell, Sixth Army coordinator for exhibit. It was then voted to dissolve the committee planning the exhibit.

Elfstrom No Intention Of Running Again for Mayor

Mayor Robert L. Elfstrom said today he has no intention of setting a precedent in Salem by running for a third term as mayor.

Beyond that he was non-committal about any future possibility of seeking public office. He said he had no plans one way or the other.

"I have been asked many times in the past few weeks," the mayor said, "whether or not I plan to try for a third term as mayor. My answer is 'I will not be a candidate.'"

"I appreciate the interest Salem people have and are showing in their city government. I have had excellent support from Salem citizens and from Salem city officials, especially from the council members.

"I can truthfully say I have enjoyed being mayor of Salem. However, it takes considerable time from business. I feel there are plenty of Salem citizens who are ably qualified to carry this civic responsibility."

Mayor Elfstrom still has over a year to serve. The primary elections will be held next May and the final elections the following November, and the new mayor will take office January 1, 1951.

Among names mentioned as possible candidates for the office are those of several who have had considerable executive or legislative experience. They include: Walter Musgrave, mayor of West Salem, if the two cities are merged by next Friday's election; Aldermen Dan J. Fry and Albert Gille, Alfred Loucks, Sidney L. Stevens, E. J. Church, Dr. E. E. Boring, and Douglas Yeater, who is a member of the state legislature.

State to Sell Land to County

The Marion county court Wednesday received written advice from the state board of control that it will sell the county for health unit purposes a strip of land facing on D street and adjacent to Salem General hospital property for $3500.

The land in question is 79 1/2 by 64 1/2 and includes approximately an acre and a quarter.

The offer will be referred to the county health board to take into consideration in making estimates as to the overall probable cost of a health unit at this spot. In event the proposal is considered feasible the present plan is to submit it to the voters at the primary election next May with a probable request for $50,000 outside of the 6 percent tax limitation to be used for the establishment of a county health unit establishment there.

The land in question has an 80 foot frontage on D street and runs back 644 feet parallel with and adjacent to property of the Salem General hospital on that street.

Those in favor of the purchase consider it an ideal location for the health unit being contiguous to the hospital where many hospital facilities would be available. They also point out that it is advantageous for the unit to have its own building with ample parking facilities and that its present quarters downtown have been outgrown.
