Houston Picked For Guard Meet

Montgomery, Ala., Oct. 27 (AP)—Houston, Tex., won its battle today to get the U. S. National Guard convention for next year.

Delegates to the annual U. S. National Guard association conference to meet in the Texas metropolis in 1950 and in New York City in '51.

The decision came at the closing session of the guard's 71st annual meeting, Guardmen earlier heard a warning from Gen. Omar N. Bradley that another war could come suddenly, without warning.

The convention reelected Maj. Gen. Thomas E. Rilea of Oregon and elected Maj. Gen. Curtis D. O'Sullivan of California to succeed Brig. Gen. William H. Abendreth of Idaho as sixth army area members of the executive council.

Bradley told delegates to the conference yesterday that "miscalculation or unfortunate incident" could lead to war without warning and that "the guard should be ready to move home divisions to combat areas upon short notice in event of mobilization."

The chairman of the joint chiefs of staff said however, he did not think war was inevitable.

Federal Aid for Schools Likely

Seattle, Oct. 27 (AP)—More than 100 county school superintendents from Washington and Oregon were told yesterday that federal aid to education is inevitable.

The executive secretary of the American Association for School Administration, Worth McClure, said that for the sake of efficiency federal funds should be administered by the state.

"I think we should stop fighting federal aid as such, and start fighting for the state control of that aid," he said.

McClure complimented the state of Washington as being one of the most advanced and forward looking in the nation for education. He also advocated the state's system of choosing superintendents—by election.

Earlier, Martin S. Miller of Thurston county led discussion on the appointive vs. the elective methods of choosing school leaders.

Selander Show Opens Saturday

The third floor galleries at Elstrom's begin their winter season of exhibitions Saturday with the opening show featuring the watercolors and drawings of Menalkas Selander, former Salem man and now an Oswego and Portland artist.

Selander is best known for his finished renderings in pencil which has placed him high among artists of the nation in this field. Not long ago he became interested in the media of watercolors.

Son of Arthur A. Selander, former Salem artist, Menalkas graduated from Salem high school.

Realizing that he wanted to choose art as a profession, he studied fine arts at the Chicago Art Institute and illustration at the American Academy of Art which prepared him for the advertising field.

After becoming established with a San Francisco advertising agency in which he created illustrations for leading magazines, he joined the army air force and saw action in the Pacific.

Upon discharge from the service, he returned to Portland, city of his birth, and has now established himself as a successful free lance artist.

Detroit Plans New Boundary

A second attempt to incorporate the city of Detroit with proposed new boundary lines was launched before the county court Thursday.

Justice Edison Vickers of the Breitenbush district filed with the court new petitions asking for an election date. The new petitions carry 86 names. Petitions for the first incorporation attempt carried 100 names. The question was voted on October 13 and lost 206 to 99 votes.

Justice Vickers states that the map of the proposed new area shows three miles cut off from the east end of the territory first sought to be incorporated or about two and a half sections of land. On the west end in the immediate vicinity of the present town of Detroit about a quarter of a mile has been cut off but part of the present town is left.

On the east end a part of Idanha is cut off. Eliminated from the proposed new area are several mills including Idanha Lumber company, Harvey Lumber company, Idanha Veneer company, Pamela Lumber company and the old CCC camp.

Vickers said he figures that in the area taken out there were 87 votes cast against the measure at the first election. Some land taken into the new area, he figures, will add 47 affirmative votes to the proposition.

The county court, as yet, has not set a date for the new election.
