U. S. Fighter Planes Track Bomber, Almost Open Fire

Boise, Ida., Nov. 3 U.B.—The Idaho Daily Statesman said today that a story was being circulated among air force men that fighter planes caught up with an unidentified heavy bomber over the northwest and were awaiting orders to shoot it down.

The fighter planes dogged the bomber until word came that he plane was a friendly one.

Written by Dave Johnson, aviation editor for the Boise newspaper, the dispatch said that this incident provided an example of how a single-plane "Pearl Harbor" raid on vital installations in the Pacific northwest might be attempted and broken us. be attempted and broken up.

"A part of the northwest's radar defense screen picked up the image of a B-29 type aircraft. A check disclosed that no aircraft of this type was known to be in the area, and fighter planes were sent to intercept it and look it over.

"The fighters found a four-engined aircraft which resembled a B-50, the souped-up version of the B-29, but certain exterior modifications prevented positive identification of the aircraft.

"The bomber had U. S. markings, but so would any aircraft being sent over the United States on a 'sneak attic.' The fighter planes reported the nature of the modifications to the radar control center.

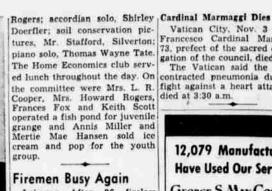

"The story has it that the fighter pilots asked if the y should open fire on the bomber is mode, while fighters clung to the mode, while fighters clung to the make was made, while fighters clung to the make was made, while fighters clung to the made and made and
