Campus Clippings

By GERI BOWLES

Highlighting the week-end's social calendar are the several fraternity parties scheduled for this evening. The Phi Delta Theta pledges have planned a semi-formal date dinner and dance and have hinted that steaks are to be included on the menu. The chapter house will be decorated with the fraternity colors of azure blue and white. The pledge class of Sigma Chi is also entertaining in a similar fashion, and has invited the members to join them at the dance following their banquet. Sigma Alpha Epsilon will "go formal" tonight at their "Fantasy Undersea". Luminous fish silhouettes against backdrops will lend an underwater atmosphere, with an old galleon providing the setting for the orchestra. There will be an orchid corsage for every coed as well as program souvenirs of dark blue paper decorated with pictures of tropical fish.

Another campus publication, "The Wallulah", Willamette's yearbook, has received the distinction of being awarded the highest rating by the National Scholastic Press association. means to achieve this end, Lowell Miller of Salem, chairman of the group, has suggested the exchange of material objects of interest between countries, the presentation to the student body of a model United Nation and a program to enable students to study situations in foreign lands first hand.

Thornton Wilder's "Our Town" has been selected as the first of three plays to be presented this year under the sponsorship of the drama department. Tryouts began last night in preparation for the performance on December at the Salem high school auditorium. The play, which centers around the lives of two families in a small town, is creating much interest among the students who are intrigued by the proposed setting which only suggests the background.
