Vaughan Paints Pumpkin Heads

New York, Nov. 7 (AP)—Presidential Aide Harry H. Vaughan—whose wife says he "never painted anything but the kitchen before"—has emerged as an artist with an oil painting of two pumpkin heads inspired by the senate's "five percenter" investigation.

The daubing by the major general—one of the targets of the senate investigators—will go on exhibit here tomorrow along with paintings by other "famous amateurs."

Sponsors of the benefit exhibition say that Vaughan, "smarting" from the inquiry, "made pumpkin heads of the senators" who conducted it.

The painting, labeled "The Path of Investigation," shows a road running off into the distance, with a question mark at the end of it. The pumpkin heads peer down on the road.

Vaughan said in Washington that he was surprised that the painting was to be exhibited and that any knew what title to give it.

"It's just my impression of most futuristic art," President Truman's military aide said. "You look at it and you can't tell just what it is."

Detroit Plan

The first election on incorporation was held October 13 and included all of the area from the west limits of Detroit up to Idanha and took in the industrial plants named. This election lost by 206 to 99 votes. When the map came in for the second election on the Detroit proposal the industrial plants were left out as well as some of the other sections. This second election was opposed by the group now asking for the vote for Idanha.

When the election was called anyway, as the law requires, they made the quick move to create the city of Idanha. They made the statement Monday that they'll have the vote at Idanha and if it carries they'll have a city of their own and Detroit can go ahead and vote as it pleases.

Idanha voting will be at the Idanha fire house from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. Members of the election board will be Lavelle Haseman, Gladys Alvin, Elsie Girod, Freda Ray and Rilla Schaeffer.

Hopes for Labor

Murray, busy with the CIO convention at Cleveland last week, now can give full time to pressing on the rest of the industry the peace terms already accepted by the Bethlehem Steel Corp., second largest steel producer.

The Bethlehem settlement provided for a $100 minimum monthly pension including government social security benefits, along with a social insurance program. It did not include a wage increase.

An offer has been made to Murray's union by Republic Steel Corp., third largest steel-maker, but its terms have not been disclosed. Charles M. white, Republic president, said it is "not the Bethlehem plan."

Attorneys for the company and the union met yesterday to iron out language of the proposed agreement, indicating that settlement was near.

He added that the interior department plans to extend its regional presentation of budget needs to other areas.

The northwestern program was worked out in part by the Pacific northwest field committee headed by Roy Bessey.

Davidson said similar committees now are functioning in the Missouri river basin and the southwest, and a similar committee will be established soon for the Colorado river basin.

Court Upholds

In other actions today the court:

Agreed to rule on (a) the right of Texas to require separate schools for Negroes and whites and (b) the right of Oklahoma to force a Negro to sit apart from white students enrolled in the state university.

Decided the U.S. district court here has power to grant a group of Negro firemen an injunction against asserted discrimination in railroad job assignments.

Today's defeat by Lewis was his second at the hands of the high court. It means that barring an unusual agreement by the court to take a second look at the case that the fine money will be paid into the federal treasury.

In 1948 Goldsborough fined Lewis $10,000 and the union $3,500,000 on similar charges growing out of a coal strike. On an appeal to the supreme court, the union's fine was cut to $700,000, but the Lewis penalty was not changed. In the second contempt action in 1948, Goldsborough simply doubled both fines.
