they could, awaiting the return of his son." As the rented car lurched along the road she reviewed the encounter, and she accepted his final, "I'm sorry, Miss Langtry You're not being fair. I advise you to find someone else to represent you." He had suggested an attorney and she had gone to him and, once there, had burst into anary tears when he had asked her if there was no man in her family to advise her. "Til do what I can," he said. "I'n have the insurance adjustor out there tomorrow." Intent upon her troubles, Arleta drove through the last town with-out thought of shopping and too tired to return, drove up to the re-sort store. For a moment she sat typing to remember what she need-tying to remember what she need-ed, wishing there were a restaurant heard the buas of many voices from the store.
